PROLOGUE.

A MAN'S HEART.

Prologue.

HOW oft through maze and wilderness of Art—
Through regal and imperial galleries—
The traveller roams for half a summer's day,
Vacant and listless ; looking with strained eyes
At landscapes worthy of Salvator's hand,
At sweet Madonnas such as Guido loved,
Or on such eloquent portraits, spirit-eyed,
As great Vandyke or Rubens might have drawn.
Yet though he looks, he sees not, save a crowd
Blent as the sands on shore, or leaves in wold ;

Then sudden, by a flash, his careless will
And wandering faculties are seized and fixed
By some sweet face, where Love and Sorrow strive
Which of the two shall sanctify it most;
Or by some ruder lineament of man,
With power, and purpose, and relentless Fate,
Seamed in each shaggy furrow of the brow.
Then is he conquered—spell-bound—held in thrall—
Until he throbs with inward sympathy,
And knows them human, as he knows himself,
By the fine fascination that he feels:—
They challenge him to pass them, if he dare,
And look upon him with mute, eloquent eyes,
That seem to say, "Come, read our mystery!"
Their glances follow him where'er he goes;
And so he stands, spell-bound, to give them back
Keen inquisition, and a stare for stare.
He reads whole histories in their painted orbs,

And looks into the chambers of their house,
And saith, "This woman loved, and suffered much,"
Or, "This man's pride was wounded to the quick
In the fierce hates and battles of the world;—
This was pre-doomed to Misery as his dower!"
Or, "this died young—I see it in her eyes."
He holds communion with them on the wall,
And knows them better than his living friends.
Oh, wondrous Art! more wondrous Sympathy!

Such picture saw I in an ancient hall—
The portrait of a lady with dark hair,
And deep dark eyes, with lightnings in their depths;
And lips that seemed to quiver with a grief
That Death itself was impotent to hide.

The picture haunted me—possessed me quite,
Like some sweet tune, bewildered in the brain,

That will not pass, though we should thrust it out;
A present spirit never to be laid
In the far oceans of forgetfulness
By any magic, or adjuring word
Until its time; when as it came—it goes—
Strong in itself, defiant of our will.

The spirit spake to me; the likeness breathed;
I knew the lady and her inmost soul;
Saw her heart's mystery clearer than my own.
Listen, and you shall learn it as I learned:
A tale of Love and Sorrow,—Sorrow and Love.
When shall these twain be parted?—Nevermore!

CANTO I.

AMONG THE FLOWERS.

Among the Flowers.

'TWAS May—sweet May—the jocund English May—
May, growing buxom in the breath of June,
When, 'mid the grass besprent through all its green
With gold and silver,—gold, the buttercups;
And silver, bossed with gold, and tipped with pink,
The bounteous daisies, jewels of the poor,—
Four sweeter blossoms of the teeming earth,
Flow'rets of human kind, God's noblest gifts,
Sported in sunshine, in the chequered glades
Of Erlwood Park—a joyous company,
Blithe as the birds, and fresh as morning dews.

Two of the four were twins, and nine years old—
Dissevered cherries from the selfsame stalk,
And like as cherries to a stranger's eye.
They chased the butterfly ; they clomb the trees ;
They leaped the running stream, or lay them down
With skyward faces, shaded by their arms,
Weary and spent with frolic that had passed,
Eager and ripe for frolic yet to come.

Apart, their sister, seven sweet summers young,
Sat pleased and happy underneath a thorn,
That dropped its pink-eyed blossoms in her lap,
A cherub and a seraph both in one.

Around her forehead, twined amid her hair,
She wore a wreath of daisies, newly plucked,
And strung on rushes, by the master-hand
Of one three summers older than herself—
A black-eyed, rosy-cheeked, and pensive boy,
Whose greatest joy was study of her face;

And who had wov'n the wreath to crown her queen—
Queen of his heart—which felt but did not know—
For golden haze of youthful ignorance—
The sorrowful joy, and feverish bliss of love,
Prompting his thought, and sparkling in his eyes.
Dear friends they were, although they wist not why,
And close companions. "Sit quite still," he said,
"Dear Edith: do not move your head an inch Till I have drawn your portrait."
And he drew,
With facile fingers, and a ready touch
For one so young, a semblance of the maid,
Crowned with her garland, and alight with smiles,
And wrote beneath it, "Edith Bellenden,
By Arthur Westwood, on a morn of May."

"For me?" she asked him, with inquiring eyes;
Then put the paper in her tiny breast

And thanked him with a glance, a word—a kiss ;
While he, the artist, proud of such a work,
But prouder of acceptance, and reward,
Restored the falling garland to her hair,
And led her to her brothers, where they stood,
Scaring with stones the minnows in the brook ;
And said, " Behold her ; she's the Queen of May,
And I'm the King!" Whereat one laughed and jeered :
The other, all intent upon a trout
Which he espied beneath a ledge of rock,
Took off his shoes, and paddled in the stream,
Heedless of brother, sister, and the world.

Ten winters passed, and once again 'twas May :
The boys were men, the maid was sweet seventeen ;
And all were friends, as in the olden time.
Rich were the Bellendens—surpassing rich :

Compared with them young Westwood was but poor,
Though rich enough to pass his morn of life
To his own fancy, and the art he loved;
To show a fair exterior to the world,
And seem, and be—an English gentleman.
Two years, or ere his eyes beheld the morn,
His father, stepping from a gondola,
Stood in the market-place—an idle man,
And watched the peasant girls of Friuli
Bring flowers to flowerless Venice. Young and fair,
He roamed for pastime, master of himself,
To study Art and Nature in the South.
Here, as he loitered to refresh his soul
With beauty fashioned in immortal stone;
Painted on canvas; streaming from the sky;
Impermeate in all shapes of earth and heaven;
He saw a maiden lovelier than Art
Had e'er imagined in its happiest dream;

With all Italia in her glowing face—
Its beauty, passion, tenderness, and hope.
He saw, admired, and fancied that he loved;—
Love born of idleness and young Romance!
He purchased roses and anemones,
And bade her come to-morrow with fresh flowers,
The choicest she could gather. Morrow came;
And with it came the maiden and her blooms;
Herself a rose and lily both in one;
Fairer than lily—redder than the rose,—
And with a warmth of summer in her smiles
Enough to ripen all the buds of spring.
He overpaid her with too bounteous gold,
Which she refused, with such a wealth of shame
That he was awed; and, more enamoured still,
He sued for pardon like the veriest slave
Who hath incensed a master that he loves,
And cannot rest until his peace be made.

She came no more to Venice. Every day
He watched the arriving gondolas and barques,
In hope to see the maid among her peers—
A queen-like rose among mere daffodils;
But she, Francesca Pia, ne'er returned.

He gazed upon the blue Friulian Alps,
Snow-capped and sharp against the cloudless heaven,
And thought how blissful all his days might be,
Forgetting England and his ancient home,
If in life's noon, he might, beloved of her,
Dwell in the valleys, careless of the world.

He sought her—was repulsed—and sought again;
Till passion, like a flame by tempest fanned,
Throve on obstruction, and consumed his soul.

Thus did he live and suffer; thus in pain
Refine an idle fancy into love—
Love golden—freed by Sorrow's fire from dross—
Love purified—the love of soul to soul.

And she took pity; she—the peasant girl—
Met the proud English stranger face to face,
And gave her hand, like lady to a lord,
Equal in love, and pride, and sacrifice,
Superior in her purity of heart.

Well she became her new-born dignity,
Learned English from the lessons of her heart,
And spake it with a prettiness of fault
More lovely than perfection; learned to sing,—
And sung with such a gush of melody,
That staid approval—of the English mood—
Forgot itself in rapture.

But she died,
Pining for Italy; a flower too fair
To brave unscathed the winds of Northern skies,
And harsh vicissitude of moist and cold;—
And Arthur Westwood never smiled again;
Or if he did, 'twas in his silent home,

Where his young boy—her boy—her only child
Smiled in his face and prattled at his knee,
And brought before him vividly as life
The fond eyes—the bright cheek—the tender voice—
The breathing spirit of the sainted dead.

Great was the mutual love of sire and son.
To the boy's heart the father was a sage;
In wisdom and in goodness chief of men;—
To the sire's heart the child was love alone,
A love all innocence—half earth—half heaven—
The link uniting both.

So lived the twain
In a fair cottage on the green hill slope,
Embowered 'mid clambering roses. All who passed
Admired the outward grace and inward calm
Of their secluded nest. Around it spread
Elm, beech, and oak, and delicate silver birch,
And all the stateliest trees of English growth;—

And in the spring, the lilac and the ash,
Laburnum and the bridal-vestured haw
Scattered their brightest blooms and richest balms.

Few were the friends who had the privilege
To enter their abode:—the Vicar first,
The guest most welcome to the widower's hearth,
Of tastes congenial. Both loved Art, and books,
Music, and ever-dear Philosophy—
Such as those know it, who on mountain tops
Look on the little wranglers far adown—
And sun themselves, bare-headed, to the Truth
That beams upon them from the upper sky ;—
Philosophy—twin-born with Piety,
That teaches love to God with love to man.
And next Sir Thomas Bellenden ; though rare
Were his intrusions on the quiet haunt
Of one so different in his walk of thought,

So lost to all the warfare of the world,
So alien to its pride, its pomp, its care.
Within a mile of Westwood's cottage stood
The Hall of Erlwood, with its towers antique,
Seen through an arching avenue of elms;
The park—a thousand acres—swarmed with deer;
And in its thickest groves a heronry
Gave life to the upper air. Within its bound
Rose many a hollow and rough-rinded oak,
That still put forth its leaflets to the spring,
Though mouldy leases of King Charles's day
Based on tradition, deemed them centuries old
Ere stout King Harry wedded Anne Boleyn,
And from fat Abbeys dispossessed the monks.
Here dwelt Sir Thomas three months in the year;—
Playing the squire—or as he thought, the lord—
A very lord in all things but the rank.
The great Sir Thomas!—If his name were heard

At Lloyd's, the Exchange, in Bank, or Counting House,
In London, Paris, Hamburg, or New York,
The rich and poor all gave it reverence ;
And struggling merchants drew a longer breath,
And sighed to think what tides and seas of wealth
Poured in his coffers, while to theirs, agape,
Fell but the scanty rain or vanishing dew !
And if that name, a scarcely legible scrawl,
Promised to pay a million on demand,
The bankers of all cities in the world
Would count it freely at a million's worth,
And give or take it readily as gold.
The great Sir Thomas ! It were hard to say
On what far oceans never sailed his ships,
Laden with costly ventures, well insured;
In what old channels of perennial trade
His profits did not run ; or in what new
He did not tap the founts of enterprise,

And bear away the draught from thirstier lips.
His name was in the mouths of busy men,
Spoken in every language known to Trade;
And never spoken but with such respect
As traders ever feel for those who pay,
And the weak strive to render to the strong.
This prosperous man was in his prime of years,
Had health and strength, the admiring world's applause;—
Two sons to be partakers of his toil,
And raise to nobler heights his tower of wealth;
A daughter, lovely, innocent, rose-ripe—
The joy, the charm, the jewel of his life;
And though the world might sometimes pity him—
That Edith's birth was loss of her who bore—
His love, if e'er he felt it, had expired
When his young wife was taken to the grave,
And dwelt not even in his memory.

All else was his, wealth and the will to spend,
Taste, education, and a liberal hand,
A seat in Parliament, an eloquent tongue,
And power to sway the councils of the realm.
And yet this man, so seeming fortunate,
Pined with a secret sorrow for a toy.
The potent Minister, who ruled the State
And moulded plastic factions to his will,
Scorned with a gentle, but invincible scorn,
The frivolous herd whose service might be bought
With ribands, garters, coronets, and stars:
And when Sir Thomas, as the sole reward
Of vote, and speech, and ready influence,
Asked for a peerage, gave him for reply
A vague half-promise and his blandest smile:
The promise meaningless, if 'twere not false—
The smile another promise, vaguer still.

Hope was his comforter, which comforts all.
Should not his sons in fulness of their hour,
Sit by his side to vote and legislate?
One for the county, ravished at a blow
From the Fitz-Nevilles, Earls of little wealth,
Who jobbed it for the pickings of the State?
The other, destined for the county town,
To win it by his talents, if he could—
If not,—to buy it;—yet not seem to buy?
Then should the Premier at his peril dare
To scorn the claim, made strong by three good votes—
Then should his honours glitter on his brow,
And the calm evening of his sunny day
Glow in a purple splendour to its close.
If this hope failed him, had he not his child,
His lovely Edith, docile as a fawn—
On whom Fitz-Neville, hale, though past his prime,
Looked with the favouring eye of sage resolve,

And deemed her paragon of all her sex—
Kind, good, and beautiful, his soul's true star—
The magnet of his fortunes and his hopes?
Thus, if no peer, he might be sire of peers.
The Earl once scorned him as too lowly born;—
But that was past; and if his Edith chose
To wear the coronet, the day should come
When he, the princely trader, should restore
The tarnished splendour of an ancient house,
And place it high in fortune as in rank.

Much he preferred the peerage for himself—
Due tribute to his greatness. "What," he asked,
"Is this proud Earl, who holds his head so high?—
The tenth descendant of a random boy,
Who studied law and ripened to a judge,
When good Queen Bess sought merit in the mire,
And set it up aloft; and if such boy
Could found a peerage centuries ago,

Why not a merchant of the present time,
With wealth enough to buy a score of Earls?"
Thus did he dream, and calculate, and dream,
And sacrifice the substance of to-day
For empty shadows of a day to come.

And now, 'tis morning, and the month is May;
And through the sunny glades of Erlwood Park
Flits beauty in its fairest human shape.
For Edith loves the country, and has left
London, the Court, the Opera, the Ball,
To have one month with nature and the sun;
And then, again, to high festivity
And all the weary overheated life,
That Fashion loves. Sir Thomas cannot come,
Save from a Saturday till Monday morn,
For the State needs him, or the Minister;—
And are they not the same?—to vote and speak,

And help to save that old and fabulous Ship
Which never sinks; though politicians say
'Tis always sinking when the Whigs are in,
And always foundering when the Whigs are out.

The Westwoods are at home, as is their wont,
The smoke curls bluely from their sylvan bower;
And Arthur angles in the Erlwood brook,
Or carves initials on the beechen rind,
Or carols to himself his own new song,
On "the old, old story"—old as human hearts.
The ancient Abbey is aflare with life
Of servants and retainers. Edith's aunt
Keeps stately house; and Edith's milk-white doe,
Pet of the park, and wild to all but her,
Follows its gentle mistress o'er the lawn,
And nibbles dainties from her coaxing hand.
The flag floats from the turret, that the world—

A little world, but large to villagers—
May learn that great Sir Thomas is at home;
And give him—if it meet him—what he loves;—
Homage, that vassals render to their lords,
And such as common souls, who dwell in cots,
Should yield to those who dwell in palaces,
And give them Christmas coals and good advice.

CANTO II.

UNDER THE TREES.

Under the Trees.

"THE old face," said his father, bending low
Over the easel, where the picture stood—
Queen Berengaria, Cœur de Lion's love,
Girding her lord to fight the Saracen—
"A sweet face—well designed; but are there none
But dark-haired, dark-eyed beauties in the world,
Mere counterfeits of Edith Bellenden,
Like as a rose to rose—or star to star?"
"I strove," said Arthur, "when I planned this work—
My master-piece, my favourite, my best—

To paint another face, another form ;—
But all in vain ; the colours would not blend
Obedient to my will ; the rebel hand,
Knowing the face I loved, broke through my law.
Not Richard's queen, but my queen—my sole star—
Lived on the canvas in my mind's despite.
So, when I painted, half a year ago,
Godiva pleading with Earl Leofric
To stay the plague of taxes, 'twas the same.
I traced fair hair; but, lo! the locks grew dark ;
The blue eyes kindled into passionate black,
And the old face—the dear face—best beloved—
The type and model of mild womanhood,
Looked on me smiling. Do you think it like ?"

" Ay," said his father; " yet it wants the soul
Of childhood, girlhood, womanhood—all mixed,
Which Edith wears, as summer wears its bloom."

" Alas !" said Arthur, " it defies all Art

To paint such living loveliness as hers.
Not one expression, or one soul divine
Has my belovèd—but a thousand souls,
All peering through the splendours of her eyes,
And each, ere you can fix it in your thought,
Sparkling away to one more lustrous still:
Pity, and Charity, and infinite Love,
Sweet Mirth and sweeter Sadness, on her lips,
Follow each other in one throb of Time.
Art would reflect them; but its mirror, dull
As the breeze-ruffled bosom of a lake,
Unresting, insufficient, fails to show
The evanescent multitudinous charms
That live, and change, and die, and live anew
On all the radiant landscape of her mind."

There passed a shadow on the father's face;
His own warm youth and passionate impulses

And bright unreason rose before his mind,
Reviving in his son, with added fires;—
Italian fervour linked with English heart.
"Arthur," he said, "we'll go to Italy;
A year of travel in the balmy South
Will give me health and spirits which I lack,
And you the opportunity, long sought,
Of study in the paradise of Art.
We'll go to Florence, Milan, Naples, Rome,
And end with Venice, which I love so well."
"Your will be my mine, father," said the son,
While sudden pallor overspread his cheek,
Then passed, and left it ruddy as before;
"Next week—ay, or to-morrow if you will—
Whate'er you deem shall be the best for you,
That also shall be very best for me."
And the sire smiled the smile he seldom wore—
The silvery radiance of a mind at ease;

And both departed to their several tasks—
The father to his organ 'mid his books,
To form sweet harmonies on minor keys,
Breathing a heavenly joy through human pain;—
To dally with the thronging melodies
That came unbidden to his finger-tips,
Each with a meaning, dying in its birth,
A riddle, and a mystery, and a charm;—
The son to work upon his master-piece—
To imitate the features that he loved,
And fix the well-known heart-bewildering charm
Indelible on canvas. All in vain!—
The mind was with the Nature, not the Art,
And gave no guidance to the listless hand.

"I cannot paint! I cannot read! I'll walk
Forth in the sunny air to Erlwood Park;
And if I meet her, 'twill be well;—if not,

I'll sit and dream beneath the beechen tree
Whereon, three springs ago, I carved her name—
The twin initials intertwined with mine.
Happy conjunction! Lo! with moss o'ergrown,
Green as the leaves above, they flourish still!"

Ah, well he knew the road that she would take,
The road, the by-path, and the hour o' th' day,
Her footfall on the grass, the flowering thorn
That she would stop at, and select a twig
To place upon her bosom, like a gem
Which he, who knew it, on such holy place,
Would gladly purchase at a ruby's price;—
A mile off he descried her glancing robes;
A mile off saw her favourite milk-white doe
Bounding before, or eating from her hand
The tender shoots from branches she had plucked,
Or beech-nuts hoarded ere the winter days.

And nearer as she drew he saw her hair
Freshly dishevelled to the western breeze,
That came and went amid its lucent threads,
As in the strings of the Eolian harp
Passes the night wind; but all noiselessly
Making a silent music in his thought.
Nearer! still nearer! 'tis her tread he hears
Amid the daisies! 'Tis her silken robe
Rustling the wayside grasses! 'Tis her voice,
A palpable music on the morning air!
And lo! she reads;—a book?—No! hush; poor heart,
Thou knowest what she reads, or soon shalt know!

Love's fondest meetings have the fewest words.
Wer't not for silence, or the touch of hands,
Or glance of mingling eyes, how could the soul
Convey its meanings? Language can but hint
Darkly and vaguely what the spirit feels.—

These two were happy. Though no word of love
Came from the lips of either, love was breathed.
Though vows were not imagined, vows were made;
And when at last the one great subject came
To the coy tongue, 'twas but in subterfuge,
Or skilful acting of a delicate play,
Cunningly plotted to an end foreknown.

"I've read thy verse," said Edith as they sat
Together on the sward beneath the tree,
And drew the folded paper from her breast;
"But let the poet read the poet's thought;
'Tis fire of soul that makes the fire of speech,
And songs come freshest from the lips of bards."
He took the paper, blushing. Happy he
Who had not in the moil and wear of life
Dulled the fine spirit in the sensitive blood
Which brought it gushing, flood-like, to his cheeks.

To be so praised by her, and so besought,
Was it not as sweet sunshine to the ground
When all the flowers leap up to kiss the spring;—
Or sight of land to weary mariners
When merry bells peal welcome from the shore?
He blushed for pride, and deeper blushed for shame;
Then taking courage, read the maid the tale
With quivering voice—husky at times for tears;
But with an emphasis, well barbed and aimed,
To reach the guarded fortress of her heart,
And win an entrance through some narrow chink
That guileless Pity had forgot to close.

Geraldine.

I.

She was the daughter of an Earl,
And I the Rector's son;
I loved her more than blessèd life,
And never loved but one.
She took my homage as the rose
Might take the morning dew;
Or a cloud on the eastern rim of Heaven
The daylight gushing new.

II.

She took it as of right divine,
And never thought of me,
No more than the rose, of the morning dew
That bathes it tenderly ;
Or the river, of the light of God
That shines on its waters free.

III.

I loved her for herself alone,
And not for rank or gold ;—
I was as heedless of her wealth
As a daisy on the wold ;—
Or a bird that sings 'mid the hawthorn buds
When forest leaves unfold.

IV.

I loved her for herself alone,
And dreamed in summer eves,
That the Earl, her sire, was a husbandman
Amid his barley sheaves;
And she, a dark-eyed peasant-girl,
As ruddy as the May,
With a smile more rich and golden bright
Than the dawn of a summer's day,
With a voice like the melody of lutes,
And breath like the new-mown hay.

V.

I loved her for herself alone,
And wished that she were poor,
That I might guide her through the world,
A guardian ever sure,

And through all peril and distress,
Conduct her steps aright;
That I might toil for her by day,
And sit in her smile at night:
My toil, a burden cheerily borne,
For her, my heart's delight!

VI.

My soul burst forth in floods of song,
When I thought my love returned,
And proud ambitions filled my heart,
And through my pulses burned.
There was no glory men could snatch
Too vast for my desire,
And all to place upon her brow,
Higher and ever higher;
Till hers was greater than mine own,
And robed her as with fire.

VII.

And when I thought her heart was cold,
And no response was given,
My mournful passion sought relief
From sympathetic Heaven.
And Nature's heart, more kind than hers,
Made answer all day long,
The wild-wind sighed, the rain-cloud wept,
The streams made plaintive song,
And the hoarse sea-billows chanted hymns
Condoling with my wrong.

VIII.

I put my passion into verse,
I built it into rhyme,
And told my hopes, my joys, my fears,
In a tale of olden time:

And read it on the garden seat,
With green boughs overhung,
She by my side so beautiful,
And I so mad and young.

IX.

She praised the bard: she prophesied
A glowing noon of fame,
To him who sang so sweet a song
Of Love's supernal flame;
But could not see, perchance for tears,
And sympathies divine,
The living passion of the verse
That throbbed in every line,
The fable, but the garb of truth—
The love, the sorrow, mine.

I had not courage to declare,
Lest hope should be denied,
The pangs that wrestled with my peace;
"Oh, foolish heart!" I sighed,
"To look so high!—But wherefore not?
Love, like the liberal sun,
Takes no account of human pride,
And scorns or favours none:
Look up, sad heart! thy thoughts are pure,
Thy Heaven may yet be won!"

xi.

One morn,—oh, well-remembered time!—
I met her on the lawn,
With streaming hair, and ripe red lips,
Blithe as Aurora, when she slips
The curtains of the dawn.

From balmy skies of cloudless blue,
Dropped music like the rain,
Ten thousand merry minstrels sang
The one exulting strain :—
"We thank thee, Day, for all thy gifts,
And welcome thee again!"

XII.

It was the bursting of the flower!
She could not choose but hear ;
I could not choose, but speak the word ;—
"My Geraldine! my dear!"
I never dared, in all I felt,
To name her thus before ;—
Unloosened were the founts of speech,
My tongue was mute no more :
And kneeling at her feet, I craved
Permission to adore.

XIII.

She blushed with pleasure and surprise,
And when I grasped her hand,
In dim wild fervour, born of joy,
Too rash for my command,
She did not slay me with a look;—
But from her eyes she threw
Sweet invitations—welcomes sweet—
And greetings old and new;—
I was uplifted from the false—
I soared into the true.

XIV.

In utter dark, devoid of hope,
What evil passions glare,
Like lurid torches waved at night
In foul and misty air.

But in the light of happy love
All evil passions die,
Or fade like tapers when the sun
Rides cloudless in the sky;
They pale, they wane, they disappear—
And in that light was I!

XV.

Till then, I never thought or knew
What charms all Nature bore,
How beautiful were Earth and Heaven;
I never lived before.
But from that moment nobler life
Through all my senses ran;
Deep in the mysteries of Time,
I saw the inner plan,
The holiness of Life and Love,
The dignity of man!

So ran the fable that his fancy drew,
Made for her heart, but woven from his own.
And when the tale was done, and silence fell
So palpable betwixt them, that the grass
Seemed rustling loudly in the startled air,
The green leaves babbling secrets from the boughs,
And the lark's song dropped on them like a weight,
He blushed deep blushes which her cheeks returned;
And she launched meanings from her glistening eyes,
Which his caught up, and flashed exulting back;—
And both were conscious of a new delight,
And breathed the vows that once, and only once,
The heart can form with equal purity.

Dream on, poor children!—dream, and never wake!
In all your raptures—come they thick as flowers
That April tosses to the lap of May,
You 'll never find a rapture like to this!

Dream on, poor children! dream, and fear to wake—
When sorrow looms, the memory of this hour
Shall shine like Hesper through the gathering dark,
And you shall say,—"Once in the days of youth
We had a vision and a glimpse of Heaven!
Once in the morning of our cloudy day
There gushed upon us overpowering joy,
Keen as the lightning flash, and lost as soon!
Let us be grateful,—we have lived and loved,
Tasted ambrosia, feasted with the gods!
Was it a dream?—What more is Cæsar's throne,
Or great Napoleon's, when the end has come?—
Was it a dream?—Could we such dream renew,
And brush away from our enchanted land
The dust and cobwebs of reality,
We'd sleep once more, and never ask to wake."

CANTO III.

FAR AWAY.

Far Away.

SAILING in sunshine through the blue lagoons
Of melancholy Venice, sire and son
Discoursed together in the gondola.
Westwood had letters from his English home
Made dear to memory by a year's long lapse,
And Arthur asked the news.

"News private?—Small:
News public?—Great; though small to you and me.
The Whigs are out, the Tories have come in,
And Parliament's dissolved; and that is all!"

"All? Quite enough!" said Arthur. "Then farewell,

Thou poor Sir Thomas, to thy fondest hopes;
Thou 'lt never be a peer, thou 'st lost thy chance,
For ne'er did Tories make a Whig a Lord!
And I am glad that one obstruction less
Stands betwixt Edith Bellenden and me.
Ah me! I would she were a poor man's child,
That I might win her for the love I bear,
Freed from the vile suspicion of the world,
That money—always money—money-dirt—
Attracts my passion, as the flame the moth.
And is there nothing else?"

"But little more;
The ancient land 's astir with wholesome life,
And all the great athletæ of the time
Gird on their armour. England needs her sons,
And were I young again, as thou art now,
I think I 'd mingle in the clash of arms,
Or clash of tongues—if that 's the better phrase.

Hast never felt such prompting in thy blood?
Lo, the world throbs with mighty impulses,
And the great battle of the Right and Wrong
Calls up the nations: England ever first,
France second, and this Italy, the third
And most unhappy."

"Ay!" replied his son,
"I've had such thoughts; and deemed it sometimes wrong
That I should loiter out my morn of life,
When strong true hearts are needed; yet why not?
My life is in its May, and looks for flowers—
The harvest is not yet."

"'Twould give me joy,"
The sire made answer, "could I see thee fix
Thy heart on some great object seen afar,
To lead thee upwards;—not for sake of fame,
Which thou couldst win, if it deserved thy thought,

But for the sake of action which exalts
And strengthens while it purifies the soul.
My days are wasted; in my yellow leaf
I see no fruit. I've dreamed my life away,
And by the light or shadow of my faults
I see the nobler path which thou shouldst take.
Believe me, Art can poorly satisfy
A soul like thine. It may refine thy tastes,
And be the charm and solace of thine hours,
When wearied for awhile with sterner work;
But action best becomes the noble mind.
Those who have gifts owe something to the State,
And 'tis this debt, so bountifully paid
By English gentlemen, that sends the name
Of England, like a watchword, o'er the world—
Watchword of Liberty and steadfast Law."

"Ay, ay! yet cannot all men serve the State

In the same fashion? He who writes a book
Brimful of noble thoughts, doth he not serve?
And he who sings a song which elevates
The poor man's heart, and makes it throb with joy,
Hath he done nothing? He who carves a stone
Into immortal beauty, is not he
As great and noble as the man who talks
On Opposition benches half the night?
Or on the Treasury benches drones and prates
About his Budget and his Income Tax,
And his five farthings on the pound of tea?
'Tis well, no doubt, to be a Senator,
To make the laws of England, and direct
Great policy to rightful aims and ends,
Or thwart great policy when it is wrong:
But these things are not all. A nation's weal
Cannot be made by Acts of Parliament;
And some must write, some sing, some dance, some paint,

Some teach, some preach, or else the manners fade,
And all the pith of nations shrivels up,
And sapless realms go down to their decay.
My calling's Art; and 't will suffice my soul."

"But," said his father, "Art is but a dream
To those, like thee, who love it for itself
And not for wealth, or as the means to rise
To social eminence of power and fame.
If thou hadst not a sixpence in the world,
Nor I a sixpence to divide with thee,
Art might absorb thee, and thou wouldst excel;
But now 'tis but thy vision and thy toy."

"What else were politics?" the son replied.
"Thou 'dst fill me with ambition; but take care!
I have it in me. If that flame be fed
It may burn higher than thy peace or mine

Would give it room for. But the time's not yet.
I 'm but a boy, and hate boy senators ;
I 'm but a youth, and hate to see a youth
Mount in the pulpit, preaching to old men :
I 'm but a student, let me study on."

'Twas three months afterwards: they 'd gone to Rome,
Seen all its sights ; been saddened day by day
At the great spectacle of Death in Life—
The old Rome dead ; the new Rome dying fast,
And most unworthy ever to have lived
On such a grave, and taken such a name :
And they were starting for the balmier south,
To Capri, 'mid the olives and the vines,
When Westwood, sitting sadly by himself,
Read, and re-read a letter just received
From his best friend, and comrade of his heart—
The Vicar.

"My poor boy!" the father said,
"How will he bear it?—how shall I make known
This utter blight of his fast blossoming hopes?
This desecration of the holy shrine
Which he imagined in a woman's heart?
And she has yielded! yielded to her aunt,
Her father, and her brothers—all her kin,
And given her hand to that superb old Earl,
Who loved so well her father's money-bags!
Alas! poor Arthur!—hush! the victim comes!"

Singing a song, exuberant with joy,
Arthur came bounding to his father's door,
His face so fresh—his eyes so bright—his smile
So full of happiness and inward peace,
That Westwood shuddered at the cruelty
Of undeceiving him, and wished some tongue,

Other than his, might tell the bitter tale,
Or any time but that might suit the task.

He was unskilful in concealing grief;—
His eyes betrayed him. "Father, what is this?"
Said Arthur, tenderly. He stretched his hand,
And gave his son the letter.

Arthur read
Calmly and silently, without a start
Or motion, save a quivering of the lip,
Scarcely perceptible; then folded up
The document that held such weight of woe,
And gave it back into his father's hands,
And said, with slow, precise, and measured words,
Calm as the motion of a cataract
When it flows shelving to the precipice—
"Had any other name been signed but that,
I should have called him liar to his teeth!

Comfort me not. I cannot bear a word
Except in anger. Call me idiot, fool—
A credulous, gaping, green, and unripe fool—
But do not comfort me. I 'm sick at heart!
Where is the Times?—no doubt 'tis blazon'd there,
In the broad columns, 'MARRIAGE IN HIGH LIFE;—
The Earl Fitz-Neville and his youthful bride,
The daughter of Sir Thomas Bellenden,
To pass the honey month.' Oh, fair young bride!
Oh, ardent bridegroom—fifty years of age,
A little older—five years at the least
Than the bride's father. Happy—happy Earl!"
And he laughed wildly at the torturing thought,
And clenched his hand and smote it on his brow.

His father pressed his hand, but spake no word;
And the son leaned his head on that broad breast,

Paternal, warm; and, after little space,
Sobbed on it like a child. "Forgive," he said,
"This burst of grief, for never—never more
In any sorrow will I weep again!
And let her names—her old one and her new—
Never again be breathed between us two."

They went to Naples, thence to Sicily,
And thence to Athens. Arthur could not rest.
He thought he'd like to row upon the Nile,
And see the Pyramids; and so they went,
And rowed upon the Nile, and thought it dull;
And saw the Pyramids, and thought them small.
And next they tried the Desert—what of that?
It was a desert;—but in their degree,
Pall Mall, the Boulevards, and the Grand Canal,
Are they not deserts also, if the heart
Find not another heart in all their scope

To change a feeling with? So back they turned,
And came to Pera and the Golden Horn,
Where Arthur fumed and fretted at the Turks,
And mourned the fate of such a lovely land,
Encumbered by such people.

In one week,
Tired of the Turks, and all that Turkey held,
The yielding father and the impetuous son
Debated to which spot of all the world
They next should travel. "Back to Italy?"
"Ay, that were well," said Arthur; "for I fear
This ceaseless whirl, that whirls me out of self,
May do thee mischief. Let us rest awhile
In some decaying city of the Po,
In Mantua or in Padua: yet, alas!
I fancy in such quietude as that
The burning rust would eat into my heart,
And leave thee childless. Let us try the Alps,

And in the gorgeous Bernese Oberland
Dwell in the valleys, 'mid the simple folk,
Where thou canst be at rest, and I can climb
Great Monte Rosa and the Wetterhorn,
Or Jungfrau; scale high rocks, and tread on snow
Where human footsteps never trod before.
I have a spirit in me that hard work
And vigorous exercise alone can quell.
Wer 't not for thee, who lovest me so much,
I 'd join some enterprize to trace the Nile,
Lay bare the roots of Niger, or explore
Australia's inner lakes of salt and sand—
Anything desperate!"

"Has Art no more
Its ancient charm to fill thee," said his sire,
"With high resolve of something to be done?"

"I should be painting Ediths evermore!"—
He answered, bitterly. "The very brush

Rebels against me when I take it up,
And plagues me with a Countess. Art grows dull,
Since she grew false. Could I invade, besiege,
And storm a borough by the dint of tongue,
I'd be well pleased to sit in Parliament.
If Love be stale, Ambition's ever fresh!
So, if agreed, we'll turn our footsteps back
To murky London; there, perchance, I'll find
Something or other, huge or strong enough
To lay the constant devil that gnaws my heart."
"Our English politics want stirring up;
They need the infusion of some younger blood;"
Replied his father. "Trade and trading things
Befit a trading nation such as ours;
But Trade;—for ever Trade and dull Maynooth,
Where Bigot fights with Bigot;—and sometimes
An episode about the Sabbath day,
When some men think it shame to wear a smile,

And criminal to roam into the fields
And breathe the breath of Heaven, depress the mind
Of legislation. Give us something more
To talk about than these; let us become
More tolerant, more wise and loftier-souled,
That in the steady tramp and march of Time
Our honest England may preserve her place
In the great commonwealth of Christian realms,
The oldest, best, and bravest of them all,
And not to be outstripped in any race
Of Wealth, or Power, or Art, or Enterprize,
Or great Dominion, or true Liberty,
By friend or foe. 'Fore heaven, I often think,
I'll try, myself!"

"And why not?" said his son,
"Thou'rt under fifty; in thy manhood's prime.

The Earl Fitz-Neville, wed the other day,
Is three years older. Better thou than I."

"Nay!" said the father, "I have formed my life,
I'm but a dreamer, and must live on dreams.
I could not tolerate the long debate;
I could not sit till three o'clock at morn,
To hear a crass, dull, awkward Minister
Wear out his subject, and my patience too.
My youthful elasticity is gone;—
No! give me books and music, and fresh air.
If the book tire, I'll lay it on the shelf,
Or taste its beauties only. If the strain
That once delighted me have lost its charm,
I'll close the instrument and take a walk.
And if all fail to while the weary time—
Thanks to all-gracious and beneficent Heaven—
I can lie down upon my quiet bed

And go to sleep. But thou, my son, art young,
And hast no habits long and fully formed;
Go thou to Parliament, and thou 'lt succeed."

They sailed again to westward, taking ship
For Syra, Malta, Naples and Leghorn—
To pass a month in Florence. Luckless thought!
They had not been in Florence but a day,
When Arthur, strolling, as the tourist will,
Into the Duomo, met—'twas face to face,
And not to be avoided, or denied—
The Earl Fitz-Neville, and a troop of friends;
And back a pace or two—amid her maids—
Edith, the Countess. Through the solemn aisles,
Startling the organist amid his fugues,
There rang a cry of pain—as glance met glance!
He saw the lovely face—the dark deep eyes—
And darted from the presence, lest its power

Should smite him into Folly, with Despair,
And fled the place, unconscious of the cry
Wrung from her heart by terror of his eyes.

By the next evening he was far away,
At Genoa; thence onward to Marseilles,
And thence to Paris, with his bursting heart,
And all its griefs reopened to the day.

Paris—the bright, the fair, the libertine,
Youthful in beauty, old in wickedness;—
Paris, the ancient home of generous men,
And now the sink of jobbers, gamblers, knaves;—
Ruled by a master-hand, whose iron grip
Slays disobedience, but forgives all else—
Vice, meanness, crime, degeneracy and sloth—
Detained them for awhile. The city swarmed
With swaggering captains and their stunted men,

Each with his marshal's visionary staff
Safe in his knapsack, and with head uplift
Saucily in the path; for had they not
Within short space, strangled, against all law,
A young Republic? slain it in the streets,
And dragged its bleeding body through the mire;
And set an armed Empire in its place,
Governed by beat of drum and bayonet thrust—
A vulgar, slavish, gross and carnal thing,
Without a soul;—unless the bees have souls?
These yield a blind obedience to their chief,
And feed and swaddle it, and make it fat,
And toil and moil, until th' appointed hour
When in hot swoop they fall upon the drones,
And kill the fluttering fathers of the State;
Or, may be, choose another Sovereign
To gorge and pamper as they did the last.
So Arthur deemed, when musing in the streets,

That, in like manner, act these bees of France,
Swarming from fauxbourgs at the tocsin's peal—
Ruthless and bloody while the fit is on,
And patient drudges when the fit wears off.

Here Arthur strove to study humankind,
But made small progress; how could he explain
The tame endurance of a land like this?
'Twas order? So is death. 'Twas peace? 'Twas rest?
He had seen rest in Nubia;—and in graves;—
And 'mid the crumbling fanes of Ephesus
There was a rotten and unwholesome peace,
But nobler peace than this, as Nature's work—
And not the base contrivance of a man.
He went to theatres, and there he saw
"Daughters of marble"—brothels on the stage.
He went to cafés;—there 'twas constant smoke;
And constant dominoes, and constant spies.

He went to churches, but he saw no men—
Or only passing strangers like himself,
Who came to look at pictures and stained glass,
Or hear the organ, and the full-voiced priests
Chanting Te Deums on a festal morn.

The pastime tired at last, "What 's France to me?"
He said and sighed, "Let 's seek that fresher land;—
Our own land, where a public soul remains
To guide the public body! Let us go—
For I am weary of the beat of drum—
The dust of troops—the slavery and the slaves;—
And long to rush into the open air
Out of this fever—to the land of Health;—
To tread the sward of Freedom, and inhale
The fresh, pure atmosphere that freemen love."

CANTO IV.

SORROW.

Sorrow.

THE Lord Fitz-Neville had one passionate love—
The love of hunting; love that nurtures hope
In the mild bosoms of presumptive heirs;
And most intensely when in life's decline
The staid possessor of some good estate
Thinks it befitting he should wed a girl.
So Lord Fitz-Neville hunted; had good sport;
Bought many horses with my lady's dower;
Went on the turf, and kept a racing stud;

And gave the county three new packs of hounds.
But being vexed one day, and thinking more
Of his vexation and its secret cause
Than of the horse he rode—a quiet beast—
The creature stumbled, and my lord was thrown
Over the hedge into a stony field,
And lay insensible. They took him home,
And plied the electric wire for speedy help,
And brought physicians from the capital,
Who came express, by horses and by steam,
And issued bulletins from day to day,
Signed by three magnates of the healing art,
To tell how much—or little—hope there was.

Three weeks he lay, nor knew the face of man,
Nor any kindness that was offered him,
Nor his wife's touch upon his fevered brow,
Nor any word of hope; and then he died.

Great was the sorrow, for my lord was good ;
A model magistrate, an upright man,
An English gentleman, wed but six months,
And sent untimely to his last account,
In the ripe autumn of his vigorous days.
Great was the sympathy ; and great, perchance,
The wonder of the garrulous peasantry
In hamlets, farms, and homesteads round about,
Mouthed by old gaffers at the alehouse porch,
And chattered o'er their tea by pitying wives
And grandams skilful in such human lore ;
If my lord's brother were indeed a Lord,
And had an earldom and a fair estate
To leave the eldest of his five tall sons ;
Or, whether in the ripening growth of Time
A new-born heir would crush their nascent hopes,
And make Sir Thomas what he pined to be,
The happy grandsire of a race of peers ?

Time came and went; and ere a year had passed
The new Fitz-Nevilles, safe and well assured,
Dwelt in the ancient seat; and Edith doffed
The formal weeds that blazon widowhood,
And set a label on a woman's grief,
And robed herself in sensible attire—
One of the common world through which she moved;
And great Sir Thomas, gathering strength anew
From the approaching advent of the Whigs;
(The Tories having wrecked the ship of state,
Or maybe, saved it, as the Whigs declared,
By being beaten); looked about and saw
Another chance of honours long desired,
Intensely coveted, and well-nigh clutched.
He was the county member, well secured:
His eldest son, at sore expense, had wrenched
The obstinate borough from the Tory grasp,
And both were voters; loyal, staunch, and true,

Pairing for Whigs whenever Whigs were right,
Voting for Whigs whenever Whigs were wrong,
The bright exemplars of all party men.
And were not such high principles and votes
Worth the small purchase of a barony?
He thought, he dreamed, he hoped, he knew they were.
He felt the coronet upon his brow;
Unseen of others—palpable to him—
A vision, bordering on reality.

And Edith roamed once more in Erlwood Park,
And read her book, and fed her milk-white fawn,
As if she still were Edith Bellenden;
And two long years were but a morning dream,
Scared into nothing by the dawn of day.

Oh, she was beautiful beyond belief!
More beautiful than when a thoughtless girl

She knew no sorrow and imagined none,
Save in the melting pages of Romance ;—
More beautiful than when beneath the boughs
She took the offering of a guileless heart,
Herself as guileless then ;—more beautiful
By all the added loveliness of thought,
And the deep sorrow hidden in her soul,
Which had refined and chastened her since then,
She seemed too fair for Earth, too sad for Heaven.

And no one knew her anguish but herself ;—
For she had given her hand without her heart,
After great struggle—after many tears—
Because she reckoned filial duty much ;
Herself, as nothing. She had sold her peace
For empty title, which she valued not ;
And, like the Patriarch's son, had lain her down,
Moaning and helpless, but obedient still,

On the grim altar which her sire had built
To offer up his human sacrifice
To his false gods of Vanity and Pride.

She told her lord the truth before she wed,
And afterwards, with many a blinding tear.
The easy Earl disliked all sentiment;
And he had taken her without her heart;
Her, and her money; and been good and kind,
And treated her with gentle courtesies,
Until she owned in silence and remorse,
And secret confidence,—if such it be,
When Conscience is the only confidant,—
That had he been her brother, or her sire,
Or any other than her wedded lord,
She could have weighed his kindness and respect,
And balanced them with friendship and esteem.
But he was dead;—and 'twas a sin no more

To think of Arthur Westwood, so beloved,
So distant, so estranged, so lost to her;
Far on the outer verge of the abyss
Which she had dug beneath their yearning feet;—
Hereafter doomed to walk on different paths;—
No more to tread the same—ah, never more!

The cottage of the Westwoods was for sale,
With all its furniture, except the books.
She bought it, through her agent, in his name;
And her dull sire, who never dreamed of hearts,
Or anything but money, rank, and power,
Could never fathom why she wasted gold
On such a purchase. Here she often went
And sat upon the chairs where he had sat,
And saw his name inscribed upon the wall,
Entwined in hers, with true-love knots between.
From the same window out of which he 'd gazed

Upon the lovely landscape spread below
She looked, and found a pleasure in the sight.
And when the blackbird in the hawthorn grove
Sang joyous, said she to herself, "That song
Pleased him in other days, and pleases me."
Amid the ivy clustering to the roof
Darted the swallows; he had watched their flight
In melancholy noons, and so would she.
To the green sward beneath the window-sill
A frequent visitor, for charity,
Came the bold robin; and she gave the dole
To the blithe beggar with the glittering eye,
Because he gave it,—steward of his alms.
She trimmed the rose-trees in the garden-walk,
Because he trimmed them in the happy days
When he believed in her, and in himself.
She nurtured sorrow by a thousand arts,

And fed it with a thousand sympathies,
And was repaid, because she thought of him.

Time wore, and she had suitors at her feet.
The Curate fresh from Oxford, with white hands,
White face, white brow, white neckcloth and white teeth,
But with a batch of hazy principles,
Scarlet as Rome; whose talk was evermore
Of crosses, candlesticks and papal gear;
Laid formal siege and battery to her heart.
He thundered at her gates with piety,
Or strove to sap the fortress with soft words,
And would not be denied or robbed of hope;—
For he was rich in bountiful conceit
And thought no woman could resist a tongue
So oily, glib and specious as his own.
And a smooth cousin of the Earl deceased,
A captain in the Guards, with whiskers huge,

Who could not speak without a burst of slang,
And smoked from morn's first dawn till evening's close,
And seemed to have no aim or end of life
But to consume tobacco—thought one day,
Between two whiffs—while shaving—that he 'd make
Great sacrifice, and give himself away.
That Edith would accept him, could he doubt?
But she refused him, and he answered "Haw!"
And smoked no longer for a round half-hour.
And then recovering consciousness and peace,
He smoked again as briskly as before,
And thought, betwixt two other long-drawn whiffs,
What an escape he 'd had from slavery
To apron-strings; and then said "Haw!" again,
Half vexed, half satisfied, and sore perplexed;
But still in confidence to his sweet self.

And there were other suitors;—human flies,
That ever drone and buzz at honey-pots,

With busy wing—lank legs—and suckers dry
For want of golden sweets—that long to light
Upon the paths of widows richly dower'd,
And settle there ;—insatiate as wasps
That dig their feelers into luscious pears,
Or burrow into peach and apricot.
But she pass'd through them, as the sunny beam
On which the midges dance, strikes through the crowd
Of little, nimble, pestilential things
That revel in its light, and knew them not.

And there came news to Arthur far away,
In the great whirl and Maelstrom of the town,
Of all that Edith suffered for his sake,
The life she led, the offers she refused,
And all the gradual blighting of her days.
But he was smitten with a fearful plague.
The love he thought she scorned, had grown to hate ;—

The hate as bitter as the love was true.
And in the struggle he essayed to drown
The fierce remembrance both of hate and love.
He lived a life of lightning—not of light—
Rapid and brilliant, but most deadly sad:
A constant battle with one haunting thought
That stared him in the face, and all night long
Lay watchful on the pillow where he moaned,
Or through his curtains, with an angel's face,
Peered in the lengthening vigils of the night,
Stabbing him through the eyes, into the brain,
With thoughts empoisoned. Whither could he fly?
Where was his Lethe? Travel was too slow,
And politics too dull, and art too tame,
And battle—which he thought of—too unjust
To give him the sublime forgetfulness
Of self and personal sorrow that he craved.
Oh, whither, whither should he turn for peace?

In what sweet fountain should he bathe his heart,
To clear it from that black and burning drop
Of passionate gall? His friend, and father's friend,
The Vicar, came from Erlwood's quiet groves
To give him comfort; but he came in vain.
A kindly man, a wise philosopher,
A pastor most benign, his threefold pow'r
Fell idly on that proud and smitten heart,
Which in the waywardness of young desire
Had looked for heavenly rapture on the earth,
And could not, for its wounds, look up to Heaven.
He scorned philosophy, that could not cure
An evil deep as his. He did not scorn
Religion and its teachings; but his soul,
Leaning on earth as youthful souls will lean,
Looked downwards, and not up, and could not see
The starlight peering through the nether gloom.
His love had been too human and too fond,

And was too closely riveted with hate,
Or what he deemed was hate—though 'twas but love
Stung into frenzy—to be linked with Heaven.
And so he listened to the soothing hopes
The pious preacher poured into his mind,
And was not soothed: and so, from day to day
Feeding fierce thoughts in fruitful solitude,
He grew enamoured of his own despair,
And played with it, and nursed it, like a toy.
And Arthur's father, pitying much his son,
Ceased to console. "Time's homœopathy
Will bring him solace: lightnings cannot flash
On the dark skies for ever. Rains must fall
When clouds are heavy, but the clouds must pass;
And a new love, more mighty than the first,
Bursting upon him like the blooms of spring,
Shall fill his being with a new delight

That shall efface remembrance of old days.
Let him alone. The heart that has no grief
Is but a dull and barren stone at best—
A quiet, happy, and unfeeling stone;
And Sorrow ripens Life to glorious deeds
That might have languished in the nothingness
Of too much ease. The soil where grief is grown
Is fruitful soil for joy; and have not I
Struggled with sorrow for philosophy,
And gained the laurel branch and victor's crown?
And so shall he: I see it in his eyes,
And trace it in the words of his despair."

Thus Westwood argued with his anxious heart,
And gathered for himself the wayside flowers
Of comfort he could feel, but not bestow;
Then hied him to his music with new zeal,
To work upon a cherished theory,

And draw the soul of heavenly harmony
From the entranced body—dumb—not dead,
Of ancient music, such as Plato heard;
Or that which charmed divine Pythagoras,
Lost to the moderns; but of which, perchance,
He in his happiest hour had found the key.

There came one day a missive to his club
From Thomas Bellenden, the eldest son
Of great Sir Thomas, begging him to grant
Five minutes' interview on urgent need.
The young man came; and after little space,
Sufficient for the simple tale he told—
Both drove together fast as steeds could run
To high Tyburnia, where Sir Thomas kept
State like an earl;—oh, miserable man,
That could not be an earl, though richer far
Than any brace of earls in all the land!

And there they saw, in mild autumnal grace,
Her white hair parted on her open brow,
Good Mistress Bellenden, the knight's best friend,
Sister—and careful matron of his home.

She, sadly smiling, without waste of words,
Opened her heart; "Is it not sad," she said,
"That a young life, most innocent and pure,
Should waste, and be consumed, and fade away,
When one kind word might lift it into hope,
And hope to healing? Edith Bellenden—
She loves the old name better than the new—
Dies without malady, save that which lurks
Insidious in the secret of her heart.
She dies for Love. There was a time, my friend,
When I, and you, perchance, with thoughtless smile
Might have denied the power of Love to kill,
Or talked incredulous of broken hearts:
But we are wiser now; or else, should be.

Edith, the lovely child, so good, so true,
The docile victim of her father's pride,
Dies for the love of Arthur. Tell him so.
Tell him, moreover, that she never loved,
With the remotest shadow of a thought,
Other than him: and that, in few short weeks,
That pure, unsullied life will bloom in Heaven
Unless he can retain it on the earth
By one kind word or look. She knows not this;
And she might die of shame were she to learn
That I became so forward in her cause,
And bared her weakness to the gaze of one
Who might, in haughtiness of poor revenge,
Exult to see it—and respond with scorn.
Tell him the truth; and let his heart decide
On its own action: mine hath done its part,
And yours will aid it, or I cannot read
The soul that glistens in your sorrowing eyes."

"If Arthur be like me," the father said,
Taking the gentle speaker by both hands,
"This news will fill him with a grievous joy;
And if her life depend upon his smile,
Death shall repent, and drop his pitying hand,
And spare the blossoming tree. But who can tell
How wild and wicked is a young man's heart?
And this boy's heart hath hot Italian blood
That chafes at Reason when it braves his will.
But he is generous, and he loved this girl
With all the fervour of his mother's clime,
And all the truth of honourable souls.
And if that love remain—ay, if one spark
Of that great fire be smouldering in him still,
It may revive. I 'll find him ere an hour,
And learn if there be healing in his words.
Meantime, dear lady, comfort and console
The perishing flower. Breathe hope into her mind,

For Hope is life. Deceive her, if thou wilt,
With hopes unfounded—anything for life.
And trust to me, and God's great charity,
And Love, the master Spirit of the world,
That Hope and Love shall purify themselves,
And dwell together. Sister! fare thee well!"

CANTO V.

HOPE.

Hope.

OPEN! wide open—to the setting sun
That poured its slant beams on the chequered floor
Through tangled fretwork of the clambering vine;—
Open—wide open to the evening breeze,
That blew balm-laden from the bounteous West,
Stood Edith's lattice. There she loved to sit
To watch the darkness creeping on the day,
And dream sad homilies of life and love
Fading, or faded,—like the summer morn
That shone so beautiful and passed so soon.

On her white garments, and her pale white hands,
The rose-red lustre of the evening fell,
As on the marble statue of a saint
Falls crimson splendour through cathedral aisles,
And clad her with a glory caught from Heaven.
Beside her sat a maiden fair as she,
Yet not so lovely; not a shadow of cloud
Dwelt on the May-day of that happy face,
Which had been fairer had a grief been there,
And left its delicate tracery in her eyes,
Or its faint echo on her silvery tongue.

"Sing to me, Rose—my Rose-bud," Edith said;
"Sweet singers find no labour in their song,
But sing for pure delight, as lark or thrush;
And thou art like them in luxurious ease
Of opulent melody, that from thy throat
Pours, as from laden clouds the summer rain.

Thy song nor tires thyself nor listeners :
Sing then, to please me, any English song
That has a heart in it—of joy or grief.
There's something in thy voice that floats my soul
Nautilus-like upon a sunny sea,
The waves beneath me—the blue skies above.
Sing to me, Rose, and waft me from myself,
And let me travel over boundless deeps
To golden slopes and bowery isles of song."

Rose Trevor, friend and comrade of her youth,
The dear companion of her childish days,
Who left the calm seclusion of her home
To watch and tend her in sore malady,
Born of the mind, the worst that flesh can feel,
Pressed her pale hands in hers, and smiling sang.

Song.

How many thoughts I give thee!
Come hither on the grass,
And if thou'lt count unfailing
The green blades as we pass:
Or the leaves that sigh and tremble
To the sweet wind of the west,
Or the ripples of the river,
Or the sunbeams on its breast,
I'll count the thoughts I give thee,
My beautiful, my best!

How many joys I owe thee!
Come sit where seas run high,
And count the heaving billows
That break on the shore and die—
Or the grains of sand they fondle,
When the storms are overblown,
Or the pearls in the deep sea caverns,
Or the stars in the milky zone,
And I'll count the joys I owe thee,
My beautiful, my own!

And how much love I proffer!
Come scoop the ocean dry,
Or weigh in thy tiny balance
The star-ships of the sky;
Or twine around thy fingers
The sunlight streaming wide,
Or fold it in thy bosom,
While the world is dark beside;
And I'll tell how much I love thee,
My beautiful, my bride!

"I thought," said Edith, when the song had ceased,
"I heard a sigh, and then a stir of leaves,
As if some stranger in the garden walk
Had lurked to listen;—prithee, look and see!"

The fair face glimmered through the clustering vine,
Like sunlight streaming through the woods of June,
And the soft voice made answer, "Fancied sigh,
And fancied stranger, or perchance a bird
Amid the ivy at the cottage door."

"Forgive the fancy then, my Rose, my love;
And sing again,—but sing to me no more
Such lilt of joy, to waken in my soul
The sad remembrance of departed time,
Linked with the name of him whose thought it spoke,
When from his heart he poured it upon mine.
Gay music makes me sad, so, prithee, Rose,
Sing me a doleful, melancholy song
Such as Ophelia, crazed and strewing flowers,
Sings in the play. If pleasure make me weep,
Sorrow, perchance, may soothe me into smiles."

Again the singer, with her mellow voice,
Ripe, round, and full, and careful of the words,
As every singer, worthy of the name,
Should strive to be—sang as her friend desired.

Song.

How could I tell that death was there?
I shot mine arrow in the air,
And knew not of the bonnie bird
Singing aloft, unseen, unheard,
Oh, idle aim!
Oh, sorrow and shame!
O arrow, that did my heart the wrong!
It slew the bird, it hushed the song!

How could I tell its fatal power?
I breathed a word in Beauty's Bower,
And knew not, most unhappy boy,
What charm was in it to destroy;
Oh, idle breath!
Oh, shaft of death!
Oh, fatal word which I deplore,
It slew my peace for evermore!

"It is not fancy, or my senses fail,"
Said Edith, starting as the song expired

In lingering whispers on the placid air;
"Hark to the footfall, and the crash of boughs!"

Rose Trevor looked again, and thought she saw,
A rapid shadow flash across the lawn;
But hid the truth, as nothing in itself,
Or only potent to disturb a brain,
Made sensitive by sorrow; and sat down,
The two pale hands in hers, and calmly said,
"Edith! 'twas but a fancy as before—
There are no listeners but thy heart, dear love:
And if there were, the song that pleases thee
Might well attract thy grooms. I'll sing no more.
For, lo! the sun has sunk into the west
And the night air grows chilly." Then she rose
And shut the lattice; and with kiss as pure
As infant to an infant, went her way
To her own chamber with a fond "good night."

And Edith thanked her with beseeching eyes,
And sought the couch where wakeful dreams were guests,
And sleep, the comforter, was coy to come.

That night was morning dawn of happiness
To one unhappy. All night long he strayed,
Sleepless, around the outer avenues,
And watched the light, to him a cynosure,
That glimmered from her chamber through the dark,
And said within himself, "When comes the day—
I will confess the evil I have thought,
And sue for pardon; I'll declare my love,
The love I strove to wrench from out my heart,
The love immortal that refused to die,
Though I decreed it daily to the death."

But when the morning came his spirit failed,

And idly dallying with his new-born hopes—
The later blossoms of a blighted life—
Deferred fruition, lest a second blight
Should nip them, also, ere the harvest time.
Night after night he wandered silently
Through the old haunts—to happy childhood dear—
Of his own cottage, doubly his, now hers,
And saw the lonely taper in her room,
A love-star, whose love-secret no one knew
Except himself; and watched it until morn
With fairer radiance dispossessed its beam,
And sent him back again to common life,
Nerved for all struggles, strong again in hope,
With heart unburthened, and with head erect,
And eyes that took a pleasure in the light
And drooped no longer in the dark forlorn.

And there came news to Edith in her bower

Of him that roamed without; of Arthur's self
Love-guided to her solitary home,
Yet lacking heart to look upon her face
And words to breathe, what he desired to speak,
And she to hear. Oh, power of blessèd Hope!
Oh, sovran balsam! Best medicament!
Sweet as the breath of Spring to opening flowers,
Warm as the sunshine to the bursting buds,
And potent as the moon on laggard tides!
It brought new lustre to her eloquent eyes,
And to her cheeks the crimson they had lost,
And to her lips the smile they'd ceased to wear
Since the dark day when at her sire's command
She gave to "duty" what was love's alone,
And laid her heart upon a funeral pyre
With filial piety and hidden tears.

But Joy and Sorrow are like Day and Night,

Twin-born of Time, who walk together still,
Inseparable, the substance and the shade;
For if one smiles and loads the heart with gifts,
The other frowns and takes the gifts away.
One scatters glory, wealth, dominion, power,
The other, if she leave the toys intact,
Will take away a child, or blessed health,
Or heavenly reason, dearest boon of all.
Oh, traitors both, and not to be believed!
Cheats that belie the promises they make,
And balance life with death; yet friendly still,—
For if the heart were drunk with constant joy
Madness might crown himself anointed King,
And dispossess the old inheritor;
And Sorrow, were she Queen too absolute,
Might lose her throne to one more fierce than she,
And yield her broken sceptre to Despair.
Great are the balances of Day and Night,

Of Summer and of Winter—Up and Down ;
Great are the balances of Joy and Grief.
Almighty Power decreed their twofold life ;
Almighty Love maintains their unison.

And so, when Edith, drinking life anew
From Hope's pure atmosphere that robed the world,
Saw through its golden haze the star of love
That seemed to have set and vanished from the sky,
But now rose clear again, and shot afar
Radiance divine;—she thought that joy once more
Might dwell beside her as in olden days :
But dreamed not of the spectral balances
That equalize the fortunes of mankind,
Nor saw that Sorrow in a new disguise
Would steal invidious on her upward path
And break her flowers and dull her brightening day.

In the upper skies of Trade, hoarse thunders rolled.
The demigods of Commerce shook their beards
And spake their sore amaze, that one of them,
The Lucifer, amid their sinless choir,
Should fall from Credit, that imperial seat,
And carry with him in his downward flight
To the deep Hades and the hopeless dark
Of Bankruptcy and Ruin, such a rout
Of minor potentates and satellites
Who shared his glory once, and now his shame.
Through Bank, Exchange, and Bourse, the rumour sped
And gathered strength and clearness as it grew,
That the great House, the overshadowing House,
The House of Bellenden—renowned and high,
And never doubted for a hundred years,
Shook at its very basement. Envious men,
O'erladen with the news, relieved their souls
By noising it abroad. Alas, too true!

It was not built upon the solid rock
Of prudent Trade, but on the shifting sands,
The treacherous quagmires, and the rotten bogs
Of desperate Speculation, and must fall
With crash to startle and confound the world.
  Even as they spake, the gaping multitude
Became aware that ruin was at hand.
High in the air rose clouds of flying dust,
Low through the ground a rumbling noise was heard,
As of convulsion in the nether depths;
And, lo! the fabric tottered—shivered—broke—
And lay as prostrate as Lisboa's towers
When earthquake smote them—shapeless, worthless, nought;
And men grew pale, and whispered each to each,
"Who is secure? if House like this can fall,
Whom shall we trust? The world is old and sick,
And Trade 's a rottenness, and Truth a lie."

Of all that mighty wealth there scarce remained
Pittance enough to pay the labourers
Who scraped the ruined heap for waifs and strays.
Of all that power, whose name was like the blast
Of martial trump and clarion in the strife,
To stir the hearts of enterprising men,
Nothing was left; its very shadow passed,
And name and fame were idle as a breath
Spoke in a desert centuries ago;
Or, ere a month had passed, became the scoff
Of portly men whose money was their god,
Whose own soap-bubbles glittered to the sun,
Ready to burst, but had not yet collapsed,
And vanished into nothingness, like this.
And "great Sir Thomas"—mockery of words!
To call him great whose greatness was as dead
As last year's blossoms, or its winter wind—
Endeavoured with strong heart and stronger will

To show new greatness in adversity;
To lift his head and look upon the world
With clear eye unabashed, and say—still proud—
"Make me a beggar—do your best, or worst—
Take from me all things—money, houses, lands,
Power, station, splendour—everything you will!
I can take nothing with me to the tomb,
Nor leave to any one who follows me
Aught but my honour. If you leave me that,
I will go down into the grave in peace,
Nor wish to live, a pauper in the land,
A crawling, pitiful, and abject thing—
A worse than Lazarus, who ne'er was rich,
And never fell from such a height as mine."

But the strong effort cost him more than life.
The inner conflict was too fierce to bear.
The wounded vanity, the trampled pride,
The outraged dignity, the sense of shame,

The keen regret for fair dominion lost
Over men's homage, and their flattering tongues;
The love of money that survived the wreck
Of money's self, and pomp that money brings;
All warred together, in a worldly mind
That had no trust except in worldly things,
And no belief in goodness, man's or God's;
Till the fine tendrils of the brain were snapped,
And the mind's music and true harmony
Jarred into hopeless discord, or was dumb.
And great Sir Thomas, little to the world,
Was great as ever in his own conceit,
And fondly clutched imaginary gold,
And counted it, and hugged it to his heart;
Harangued imaginary Parliaments,
And put upon his brow ideal crowns,
And sent to sea imaginary ships
Freighted with dreamy ventures, huge enough,

If dreams were facts, to build his house anew,
With tenfold strength to overawe mankind.
And Arthur, much amazed, reproached himself
For joy that came unbidden, when he heard
The great calamity. "Oh, wayward heart,
Thou treacherous, bitter, black, and guilty thing!
Why art thou glad that grief like this hath come
On her and on her father? Why shouldst thou
Take pleasure in disaster like to this?
And yet thou 'rt glad; and I am glad, my heart—
Not for affliction—would it had not come!
Not for the sorrow; for if I could heal
Or lessen, or remove it, blest were I.
But all thy motives are mine own, dear heart,
And I can see thy secrets clear as noon;
Thou canst not cheat me; canst not hide one spring
Of all that moves thee; and thy joys, like mine,
Flow from a fountain of perennial love

That never failed, although it seemed to fail.
For are we not made free? And can we not Without reproach or slander of the world—
Without suspicion that vile dross and gold
Inspire our homage, haste to Edith's bower,
And lay our fortune, life, and love, and hope,
As offerings at her feet? We 'll go, my heart!
For she is sick and needs a comforter;
Weak and requires support; distressed and sad,
While I have words of solace on my lips,
Panting for utterance; poor, while I am rich—
Ay, doubly, trebly rich! Oh, happy day,
When I can woo her for herself alone!
And prove to her, as to my nobler self,
That dearer in her poverty and grief
Is Edith Bellenden to him she scorned,
Than Edith Bellenden, in blaze of wealth,
And bloom of beauty. Heart! thine hour has come."

CANTO VI.

HAPPINESS.

Happiness.

LINGER! oh, linger! ye delicious hours!
The stormful March—the tearful April's gone—
And life's fresh May, with all its buds and blooms,
Its balmy odours, and ambrosial skies,
Smiles on two loving hearts, dissevered long.
Linger, oh, linger! ye delicious days,
That hopes and joys may blossom like the flowers,
That happy thoughts may sparkle like the stars,
And peace of mind, like the o'erarching sky,
Shine forth unclouded, dropping heavenly dews!

Linger, oh, linger! Love is in its noon;
Grief is forgotten; pain hath passed away;
And Memory, if her mournful voice be heard,
Whispers in music; if her shadow fall,
'Tis but to show how glorious is the light.

Linger, oh, linger! Yestermorn were wed
Arthur and Edith. Be it thine, O Time,
To pay them recompense for sorrow past.
Time—such as thou—is essence of all Time,
And one fair day may carry in its breast
The joy of centuries. They suffered long;—
Let them be happy! And if grief must come
Once more upon them, as it comes to all,
Fill up the interval with pure delights;
Make every minute fruitful; shower them down
Blessings and pleasures in each tick o' th' clock
And balance of thy ceaseless pendulum,
Dispensing grief and joy to all who live.

Thou canst not stay thy course; but Love and Truth
Can make thy minutes bountiful as years,
And turn the years to ages. Love is wed;
And Truth was at the bridal in both hearts,
And smiles from mutual eyes and mingling lips.

And Arthur's sire is in his ancient home,
New fitted for his ease by Edith's care;
Amid his books, his music, and his plants,
As mildly happy as in former days;
And builds new melodies, and studies hard
To ravish from the undivulging past
The buried secret of the songs of Greece,
That still escapes him, and still seems to come.
Quietly flows the streamlet of his life;
And, having much of Love and little Hate,
He takes to hating something—for a change;
And, with his friend, the Vicar, spends his nights

In loading epithets of harmless scorn
On false pretences, and on foolish books ;
And on tobacco, and on smoking boys ;
And working up a theory, fine-spun,
Of woes nicotian looming o'er the world ;—
Deterioration of the human race,
Stunting of stature, drying up of brain,
Shrivelling of beauty, and decrease of years,
All from Tobacco, and its senseless use.
And then the Vicar takes the other side
In a mock combat; wondering much to learn
How Homer could have lived without cigars,
Or Socrates and Esop without pipes ;
And how the ancients managed to exist
Quidless and snuffless, tealess, coffeeless,
Without the journal and the printed book.
And ever and anon they change the theme
To higher questions of philology,

Philosophy, and politics, and war:
Or how to raise the funds to build a school,
Or add a trifle to the teacher's dole;
Or read the letter in the morn received
From happy Arthur and his happier bride,
Sailing in Scotland through the Hebrides.

When lovers look upon the selfsame flower,
And feel it beautiful; upon the sky,
Glowing with gold and purple in the West,
Or on the amber splendours of the Morn
Lighting the landscape, or on starry nights
Behold, awe-struck, the living firmament
Ablaze with worlds, reproachful of our pride,
And feel a pleasure words are poor to speak;
How rapturous is the touch of clasping hands,
And what occult transcendent sympathies
Glow in the heart, and elevate the mind,

And link to God, to Nature, and to Man,
The spirits twain made one by happy Love!
Such joy is Edith's, sailing in the West;
Such joy is Arthur's, pensive at her side;
For all the land, magnificently rude,
With isle, and mountain, and far-stretching sea,
And musical with roar of waterfalls,
And murmur of the waves upon the beach,
Appeals where'er they go, where'er they look,
To sympathies benign. Away! Away!
Through changeful scenes of ever new delight!—
On either side the hoary mountain-slopes
Rise like the Titan fathers of the clime,
Lovely in sunshine—beautiful in shade;
Or in their mantles of majestic mist,
Lashed by the storms that bellow through the glens,
Sad as discrownèd kings and potentates
When Revolution surges in the streets,

And angry voices roar for Liberty.
Away! Away! amid the clustering isles,
Through lonely Mulla's melancholy Sound,
Where every rock, and crag, and jutting point
Hath its own legend and sad history
Of Love or Hate, Ambition or Revenge.

At every turn, what memories awake!
Heroic phantoms shape themselves in cloud—
The spectral forms of chieftains, bards, and kings,
And mighty patriots of the olden time.
And wizard voices murmur on the shore,
Heard of the Fancy—silent to the ear,
"On these blue waves sailed Fingal and his hosts,
Thronging to battle with uplifted spears:
On these grey rocks were Haco's warrior-ships
Battered to fragments: in these straths and glens
The kilted Gael, with heather in their caps,

Raised the loud slogan and ferocious yell,
As chief met chief in sanguinary feud.
And here, great Wallace, freedom's bravest son,
Made Scotland famous in the ennobling war
Of Right against the Wrong. Here, deep concealed
In wild sea caves, or gullies of the rock,
Like David, followed by revengeful Saul,
A desperate and a broken man he lay,
But never lost his confidence in God,
Or love for Scotland.—Here, in moorlands bleak,
The dauntless souls, oppressed for Conscience' sake,
Who held aloft the Bible and the Sword,
And fought with both, came forth on Sabbath-days,
'Mid storm and rain, bareheaded to the sky,
And sang their psalms, with daggers at their hips;
Armed to resist, as if their prayers to God
Were treason to mankind. And here, arrayed

By secret summons—at the storm of drum
And burst of pibrochs wailing on the wind,
Issued Lochiel, and all the gallant hearts,
Who, for a name which grief had rendered great,
And vast calamity had purified
From taint of ancient Wrong, imperilled Life—
Fame, Fortune, Honour—all that men desire
To mend a broken sceptre, passed away
From hands unfit to wield it."

On, still on,
Amid such memories, sailed these loving two
Through Caledonian isles magnificent,
And fed their eyes on fair sublimities
And mingling grandeurs of the Earth and Sea.
Onwards!—still on! To Staffa's echoing cave,
Cathedral of the Ocean—whose high fane
Resounds with voices of the waves and winds,
Chanting for ever holy harmonies,

Such as they chanted in Columba's ears
When first he preached in near Iona's isle
The Gospel of the poor, the sufferer's hope—
The great new law of Charity and Love—
A new law still, and little understood
By warring sects that hate their fellow-man.
And there they linger'd last of all the crowd,
And in that solemn Temple of the Lord,
That vaulted Dome, with porphyry pillars huge,
Not made by human hands, they stood aloof,
Alone and unperceived. With one accord,
They joined their hands in token of their truth,
And joined their lips in token of their love,
And said, without a word, in silent thought
Flashing from eyes more eloquent than tongues,
"Here we renew the promise of the Past,
And in the presence of the Invisible,
In His own Temple, dedicate our lives

To Him and to each other."

Onward still!

Through Morven and Lochaber,—mournful lands,

Once the abode of brave, true-hearted men,

But wildernesses now for sheep and deer,

The appanage of Luxury;—scarcely trod

Save by the shepherd's foot, or, rarer still,

By Crœsus with his gun, or legal drudge,

Set free from briefs and quirks, and Chancery fogs,

From August till November. On! still on!

To Ballahulish and its hills austere,

And wild Glencoe, the saddest spot of ground

On British soil; where every mountain-top

Re-echoes "Murder" when the thunder roars;

And the clear Cona, with reproachful voice,

Croons like a beldam that has known o'ermuch,

And hints of crimes too fearful to be told.

Where shall they turn? To shady Aviemore
And green Craigellachie, embowered on Spey?
Or to the savage haunts and purple wilds,
Where great Ben Nevis wraps his waist in cloud,
And with his bare bald head looks up to Heaven,
Unmindful of the crooked ways of men?
They know not well; but Chance determines them.
But is it Chance or Fate? Whiche'er it be,
They take its guidance, and resolve to rest
A month at Bannavie:—a little space,
Whence daily issuing they may thread the glens,
Or row upon the lake—or scale the heights
Up to the very crown and diadem
Of royal Nevis.

Pleasant were the morns
In those rude solitudes;—pleasant the noons
When the light breeze on Lochlin's azure breast
Invited them to sail;—pleasant the eves,

With their long twilights, lingering silvery-grey
To overtake and mingle with the night,
That scarce was dark enough to know herself
Co-regent of the sky, but for an hour
Between two twilights: pleasant to them both
Were calm and storm, the sunshine and the shade;
For in their hearts were pleasantness and peace,
Which thence o'erflowed and sanctified the world.
They found not Happiness, and sought it not,
But took it with them wheresoe'er they went;
As all must do—or know it nevermore!

So much they loved—so deeply they enjoyed—
So warmly praised their northern solitude,
In frequent letters to the tamer south—
Edith to Rose, the playmate of her youth,
And Arthur to his sire, his heart's true friend—
That ere the June had ripened to July,

And days had shortened, came three visitors,
Westwood, and Trevor, with his daughter Rose,
To tread the grassy slopes, to track the streams,
To breathe the buxom air of seaward glens;
And turn a virgin page of Life's new book—
Ready for memory in a future Time.

CANTO VII.

LOVE ETERNAL.

Love Eternal.

OH, mountain echoes! slumbering in the clefts!
Never did blither company than this
Awake your magic voices with their own,
And fill with gladness the responsive air.
The morn is young; the flowers, the grass, the trees,
And gossamer webs that stretch from branch to branch
Of the red heather or the golden gorse,
Are hung with jewels of the nightly dew,
Which Day, new-risen upon the misty plain,

But old upon the hills, has lighted up,
As if each droplet were a rolling world
Set in the distant heavens to catch its beam.

A careless and a joyous company,
With ponies, guides, and all appliances
To pass the summer day upon the Ben,
They start, these friendly five, from Bannavie,
Clad for the hills, and eager to ascend
To those serene and barren altitudes
Where Nevis looks o'er Scotland and the Isles,
And counts in summer eves his subject hills.

Oh, pleasant morn! and what shall be the night?
The darkest clouds upon the hopeful sky
Are white as feathers of the seagull's wing,
And take no light or promise from the day,

But give it both. Yet, what shall be the night?
They know not—think not—ask not—and 'tis well.

"Nine by the sun, and half-way up the Ben!
Let toil and hunger, and fresh exercise
Receive their due reward. Here let us rest:"
Quoth Westwood to the guides. "This oozing spring
Born in the mountain's breast shall yield us drink,
Dashed with the mountain dew that owes no tax
To our liege lady on the banks of Thames.
Display the breakfast!"

On the broad bare stone
The guides disburthened them of thrifty store
Of oaten cakes, as sweet as scent of briar,
Of butter, fresh as mead ere mowers come,
Of eggs, no older than the summer day.
And appetite, made keen by upland air,
Does honour to the simple festival.

Rose Trevor, merry as the lowland lark,
Left far adown and lilting in the glens,
Eases her sense of superabundant joy
By music's voice, as natural to her
As light to suns, or scent to mountain thyme;
And sings till honest Donald and his boys,
Their guides upon the Ben, in glad amaze
Declare to one another as they tend
The ponies browsing near, that never yet
Was mortal voice so exquisite as this.

Up! up again! There 's work that must be done.
The knees of Nevis may be clad in flowers—
His waist may wear a girdle of the pine,
His shoulders may be robed in heath and fern
But his broad neck and high majestic head
Are steep and bare—and he who 'd climb, must toil.

Noon on the mountain! glowing, glorious noon!
And they have reached the very topmost top

Of Britain's isle ; the crown above all crowns
Of royal Bens ! Oh, wild sublimities !
None can imagine you but those who 've seen ;
And none can understand man's littleness
Who has not gazed from such dread altitudes—
Upon the world a thousand fathoms down—
O'er precipice of perpendicular rock,
Which but to look at makes the brain to reel,
And fills it with insane desire for wings
To imitate the eagle far below,
And free itself of earth ! And here they stand,
Awe-stricken and delighted ; great, yet small ;
Great that their souls may dare aspire to God,
To whom the mountains and the universe
Are but as dust on the Eternal Shore ;
Small in the presence of those ancient hills
Which stood the same, and evermore the same,
When Abraham fed his flocks on Shinar's plain,

And Job beheld Arcturus and his sons ;—
The same—the same—and evermore the same—
Unweeting of the whirl and spin of Time,
And heedless of the fall of states and kings
And mighty monarchies, that dared to blow
Through slavish trumpets the blaspheming boast—
" The seasons pass—but we endure for ever ! "
Where are they now ? Let Rome and Carthage say,
And Babylon answer, " Dead, and pass'd away ! "

Upon that topmost height within the shade
Of the grey Cairn that shields them from the sun,
Again the board is spread with frugal fare ;
A banquet earned, and seasoned with delight
Of genial converse and the flash of minds,
In great new circumstance unknown before.

Meanwhile, unnoticed, from the glens beneath
Uprolls a sea of mist. The wind hath changed ;
And the fine snow, as sharp as needle-points,

Blows in their faces. Mist, thick mist, pours on,
And so enshrouds them where they sit or stand
That each to each looms spectral and remote—
A thing of shadows in a shadowy land;
The mountain-top and twenty yards around,
The only visible earth; themselves alone
The earth's inhabitants. At times a glimpse
Through drifting clouds that clash against the Ben,
Unveils the world below: Lochiel's blue wave;
And far away a wilderness of hills;—
And then the pageant passes like a thought,
And they are shut in Chaos, as before—
A chaos of upsurging, streaming mist,
From which they may not stir, if they would live.
For all around are yawning pits and chasms,
And on one side a precipice of rock,
Where half-way down the eagle seems a moth,

And crags, as lofty as cathedrals, dwarf
To things scarce bigger than an urchin's toy.

Three hours amid the mist! The guides alarmed,
Betray by rapid looks, yet not by words,
Their growing terror, lest the night should come
And find them still upon the mountain-top.
And now the big rain and the whistling hail,
As large as berries shaken from the bough,
Bursts from the cloud as from a floating sea,
And on their shelterless heads and shivering forms
Pours in fierce torrents. Huddled close as sheep
When winter snows fall sudden on the fold,
They crowd together, wrapping thick in plaids
The tender women. But the drenching storm
Must work its will: and if it rage till night
Cannot, with all its fury, harm them more
Than it hath done in this one gush of Time;

For they are wet as sea-weeds on the rock
When the full tide comes plashing, roaring in,
And must endure the evil; better still,
They turn it into merriment and joy.

Six hours amid the storm! The mist upclears
And they behold again the welcome world
Around them and beneath; and far adown
The straggling remnants of the cloudy host,
Foiled in the assault against the steadfast hills,
Lag in the valleys, broken and confused.
But gathering near on level of their sight,
The anxious guide descries the phalanx huge
Of clouds with blacker bosoms, lightning-fraught.
"Let us descend," he saith; "there's danger near,
And greatest danger on the mountain-top.
There's shelter in the glen; and one hour's march
Will bring us to the ponies. Let's away!"

They start in resolute haste, the guides in front,
Arthur and Edith next, linked hand in hand;
Then Westwood, Rose, and Trevor. Wild and bare
And dark around them lies the wilderness
Of shivered rock and gaunt mis-shapen crag.
Toilsome th' ascent; but perilous and slow
The downward scramble o'er the slippery shale
That yields beneath the foot. But on they press;
For, lo! the gusty rain with fitful whirl
Beats in their faces, and the lightning-burst
Illumines heaven with glare blue-venomous,
And drags behind it in its fiery car
Th' obedient thunder. Lifting up its voice
It shouts to all the hills, which answer back
From cavernous glens and corries far away.
And, lo! the bolt hath fallen where they stood,
And with a crash as if the Ben were riven
To its deep heart, down falls the jutting crag

In multitudinous heaps of splintering stone.
The women shriek in terror; and the men,
With fear-white faces and uplifted hair,
Appeal with eloquent eyes to pitying Heaven
To shield and save them 'mid the war of storms.
Then as the coiling echoes die away,
Press onward, downward, with redoubled haste,
To reach the shelter where their tethered steeds
Await their coming.
Vainly they 'd escape
The region of the thick tempestuous cloud;
For lower down, and filling all the glen,
The mists have gathered; and once more they halt,
Uncertain where to turn, or where to rest.
The guide, at fault, has wandered from the way,
And night is looming. Edith's heart beats high
With hope and courage; Rose's faints and fails.
The men are vigorous, as men should be;

And holding counsel with their high resolve,
Weigh all the chances of the mist and storm,
And how they best shall help their tender ones
To pass the night in safety on the Ben.
They sit, they talk, they know not what to do,
Yet fear no evil greater than the cold,
When suddenly a vista through the cloud
Unfolds the lingering splendours of the day,
Fading in twilight ; and a golden gleam
Into the darkening landscape far adown,
Mountain, and lake, and many a seaward glen.
Edith and Rose, as agile and alert
As dapple fawns that sport upon the hill,
Trip lightly forth, like playmates, hand in hand,
To gaze upon the loveliness beneath,
Upon the seas of curdling cloud and mist
In mighty masses heaving evermore,
And deem that never have their eyes beheld

A vision so sublime. Entranced they stand,
As angels might have stood on Earth's first morn
Upon the mountain peaks of Paradise,
When Chaos, disappearing, trailed his robes
Of shapeless mist the last time o'er the world,
That hailed his absence with her brightest smile,
And leaped to be released.

But creeping slow,
Unseen, unnoticed 'mid their ecstacy—
A cloud that might have covered half the Isle,
Down sailing from the far-off Northern seas,
O'er Grampian summits, clad them round about
So densely, that the ground on which they trod
Became invisible—and their outstretched hands
Faded away into the hungry space,
And their near faces disappeared in cloud.

They called upon the names of those they loved:
Louder—yet louder still—and heard far off

A faint response come shattered up the glen.
" Courage ! " said Edith ; " Courage ! here we stand Until they rescue us. To move is death."
The other spake no word, but grasped her hand ;
And ever and anon they heard far down
The voices calling them. " Oh, sister mine !
Sister thou art, and more than sisterly—
Let us be brave. 'Tis but one dark, cold night,
And after night the morn. The rising day
Will clear the blinding mist, and help will come."
They sat them sadly down, but scarce had room
Upon that narrow ledge of shelving rock
To rest their trembling feet or fevered heads.
" Courage ! " said Edith. " Courage ! " answered Rose.
'Twas the last word that either of them spake
In that long night : for sleep, the invincible,
Best friend of mortals, next to friendlier Death,
Pressed on the eyelids of the tenderer flower,

Unwelcome and unasked, but still benign,
And drowned her sorrow in unconsciousness.
Ere morn she woke—and lo! she was alone!
And where was Edith? Brightly shone the sun,
The earth was luminous, the mountain-top
Stood clear and sharp against the bright blue sky,
And every cot and bothy in the glen,
Ay, every tree and boulder miles below,
Was palpably defined: but where was she?
Had she, adventurous, braved the pathless wild,
Or sought the aid of shepherds from the farms
To save her weaker sister? Ay! no doubt!
For she was bold and of a noble heart!
Alas! alas! that Fate, or Providence,
Or Doom, or Fitness—twin-conceived with Fate
Ere Earth began her orbit, or the Sun
Shone in the centre to compel her course,
Should have decreed that this most innocent life

Should be such victim, and that such despair
Should follow on such superabundant joy!
Ah! little did they think who all night long
Mourned for her houseless on that ghastly hill,
And hoped and prayed for coming of the morn,
What utter, unimagined misery
One little moment and one step in the dark
Might bring to many lives so fondly linked
By love, and friendship, and sweet sympathy!

Wakeful—impetuous—eager for the dawn,
That faintly streamed o'er blue Loch Linnhe's wave,
Edith had wandered from the ledge of rock,
To look for aid, that she imagined near,
Unweeting of the precipice beneath,
And lost her footing! With one wild, sharp shriek,
And swiftly as a bird that leaves the cliff
To sail the friendly air, she reel'd and fell—

Down, down, into the treacherous abyss—
Three hundred fathoms down—to certain death.

It was not till the noon—the dreadful noon—
Glaring and gay as if this thing were not—
Glaring and staring in its lusty life—
That they discovered, in the glen below,
The lovely body of the loveliest soul
That ever brought a comfort to the world,
Or took a joy away in going home
To that serener world whose door is Death.
The tender limbs, the white maternal breast,
Were bruised and mangled by the cruel rock;
But it had spared the beautiful bright face
Which seemed as if th' angelic spirit slept,
And might awaken yet, if Love would call.
And Love did call, with wild and passionate speech,
With frantic gesture and insatiate kiss

Upon the clay-cold lips that kissed not back,
And on the closèd eyelids of bright eyes
That looked not love again—or looked from Heaven.

For three long months lay Arthur on his bed
Delirious, raving of the love he 'd lost,
And talking to her in uneasy dreams,
As if she lived, and sat beside him still,
An angel at his pillow. But this passed,
And he recovered consciousness and strength,
And walked again into the world of men.
He passed among them, alien to their joys;
For all his thoughts were coloured by his loss,
And to his mind, high-wrought by suffering,
He deemed it sacrilege that he should smile ;
And selfishness that any scheme of life,
Without her presence, should be worth his care.
" Men have no hearts," he said. " Alas ! not so;

'Tis heart, not head, that ravages the world—
'Tis heart that makes the misery of hearts.
And life were happy as a midge's dance,
If heart ne'er taught us that humanity
Is born in—lives in—dies in suffering.

" Since first I lost her, oh, my love's best treasure !
There hath been darkness on the weary day;
A throbbing anguish in the purest pleasure—
Pleasure ? Ah, no ! Its fair face passed away
With hers still fairer ; and its glancing robe,
Mist-woven, vanished from the globe.
I look upon the light of morn,
And wonder, utterly forlorn,
How it can break when she' s no longer here ;
And when the young buds blow,
Rose-tipped or white as snow,
There seems a want of Pity in our sphere,

That Nature's self should not refuse
The sunshine and the dews,
When she, her sweetest child,
So young and undefiled,
No longer breathes upon the vernal air
The fragrance of her unforgotten bloom—
Lost! lost for ever, in the tomb,
That never yet had habitant so fair.

"Come Day! Come Night!
I note your changes, heedless of them all;
For evermore, betwixt you and my sight,
A sweet face, with a coronal
Of glory, heavenly bright,
Looks down upon me, tinting the long hours
With a celestial paleness. Sleeping, waking,
Ever I see it; till my eyes drop showers,
And make the vision brighter by my weeping;

Brighter—but still more sorrowful to see,
Except when Night lies gently on my brain,
And Sleep restores her to my soul again,
As Death—Sleep's brother—shall in days to be,
If day be word or thing, in God's Eternity.

"Where are my once high thoughts that soared sublime,
My purpose brave;
The hopeful glow and fervour of my prime?—
Low in her grave.
Most little and most mean appear to me
All that the world can offer me again.
Wealth is a froth-bell on a billowy sea,
And power, and pride, and all the gauds of men,
Mere tricks and shadows. Were I Earth's sole king,
To rule all nations by my high behest,
Nor I, nor they, nor all their wealth, could bring

My lost belovèd living to my breast.
Why could I not have known, ere forth she went
To that angelic land where she appears
In her full glory, that she was but lent
For brief, brief space—a halo 'mid my tears?
That in each moment of her perished years
I might have poured upon her radiant head
More wealth of Love than ever heart of man
Poured upon mortal? Let my tears be shed.
No one shall comfort me. And no one can.

"Was she so like an angel in pure guise,
That thou shouldst take her, ere her time, O Death!
To join her sisterhood in Paradise?
Or was the earth too balmy with her breath,
Too radiant with the light
Drawn from the Infinite,
And concentrated on her innocent lips,

That thou shouldst pass, with this too dire eclipse,
And rob us of her beauty? 'Twas unjust
To Earth and Heaven to lay her in the dust,
Ere she had shown us all her wealth of bloom,
Only to feed the avaricious tomb!
Lo! Misery, through long days
Clasps her lean hands and prays
That on her head may all thy shafts be hurled.
Lo! Age and Pain implore
That thou wouldst ope thy door,
And let them ooze into the painless world!
Why pass them? They would bless thy power,
But mine own sweet and early blossoming flower
Adorned the forest, and made bright the place
Where we beheld her in her youthful grace.
The poison weeds grow rank, and taint the air,
While the sweet violets fade, and rose and lily fair.

" Methinks the spirits of the sainted dead,
Whom in their lives we loved, are with us still,
That all around our paths their light is shed;
Pervading witnesses, who at their will
Know all we think or do. Let us be pure.
Let us not give their Immortality
Reason for sorrow or shame. Let us endure
Calmly, though sadly, the all-wise decree
That took them from us: and instead of flowers
To strew upon their graves, or tombs high-piled,
Let us bestow on them unsullied hours,
And innocent thoughts, and actions undefiled."

But these were whispers—spoken to himself.
A deeper purpose settled on his mind,
A dark presentiment—that he should die
When he had ended an appointed task.
" Father," he said, " I feel that I shall live

To finish Edith's portrait. When 'tis done,
I know that I shall die. Nay, argue not;
For by an inner consciousness, and voice
That seems like Edith's whispering in my mind,
I know that this shall be."

And so he wrought
Daily upon the portrait of his love,
That grew beneath his hand—a master-piece.
And oft he'd gaze upon it by the hour,
Imagining some touch—were 't but a hair—
To add resemblance; dallying with the smile
That gleamed upon the lips, or with the glance,
Soul-speaking, of the pensive full dark eyes.
He lived but for his picture: that alone
Had full possession of his mind and heart,
And every faculty. And when at last
The work was done, and Art could do no more,
His mournful prophecy of love and grief

Fulfilled itself: and breathing the one name,
He laid his head upon his father's breast,
And clasped the sympathizing hand, and died.

They sleep together, in one humble grave,
Under the ancient yew that overlooks
The moss-grown portico of Erlwood Church.
And thither every morn a maiden comes
To tend the flowers; and thither every night
A father strays lamenting for his son.

THE END.

London: Printed by SMITH, ELDER and Co., Little Green Arbour Court, E.C.

Lately Published, the Second Edition of

LIFE AND LIBERTY IN AMERICA.

By Dr. C. MACKAY.

In Two Volumes, post 8vo, with Ten Tinted Illustrations, price 21*s.* cloth.

"'Life and Liberty in America' is a fresh, bright, and hopeful book, worthy of the author whose songs are oftenest heard on the Atlantic. The author of 'The Good Time Coming' writes as healthily as he sings, describing, as he tells us, 'Life' as he saw it, and 'Liberty' as he studied it, both in the North and in the South."—Athenæum.

"This work conveys a large amount of information concerning America, presented in a pleasant and readable form. Dr. Mackay gives a succession of pictures taken from society as it is, and tells you, in common-sense fashion, what he thinks about them. The volumes are filled with the kind of information which nineteen persons out of twenty who wish to read about America desire to possess."—British Quarterly Review.

"The sketches that Dr. Mackay gives of things across the water, are vigorous and interesting. He does justice to the wonders of nature, and to the almost equally wonderful social phenomena of the New World. His pictures of the great rivers, cities, and forests of the West are striking. . . . His account of Niagara is one of the most distinct and intelligible we have read. . . . Dr. Mackay has produced an agreeable and sensible book of travels."—Guardian.

"In each city and state, the salient points—social, historical, political, and architectural—are most happily laid hold of, and described with the eloquence of a poet, and the heartiness of thorough manly feeling. Freshness distinguishes every page, and the book is altogether free from those personalities which are almost equally offensive whether ill-natured or fulsome."—Globe.

"A good-natured book, full of liveliness and sense. For pleasant incidents that lie upon the surface of society Dr. Mackay has a keen eye, and his writing is easy."—Examiner.

"We commend these volumes to careful perusal, as presenting the result of careful and diligent observation, assisted by personal associations well calculated to facilitate the way to the attainment of truth."—Leader.

"It will be found trustworthy as a guide; replete with valuable knowledge and sound opinion, frank and yet judicious, and written in a style of unaffected beauty and simplicity."—Illustrated News of the World.

"There is much travelling incident, some statistical information, and abundance of picturesque description, in Dr. Mackay's two volumes of American 'Life and Liberty:' he exhibits good sense, kindly feeling, and freedom from prejudice and partizanship."—Westminster Review.

"Dr. Mackay's volumes give us the latest, and, in many respects, the pleasantest views of the new Anglo-Saxon community, which we have anywhere seen."—New Quarterly Review.

"'Life and Liberty in America' is a readable and entertaining book, and will no doubt prove a great favourite."—Literary Gazette.

"The reader may look for much that is interesting, and a good deal that is novel, in these volumes, and be certain to find both; and he will find, moreover, old subjects described in a pleasing manner."—Observer.

"The topics have been treated in a concise and satisfactory manner. The style is light, for the most part, and chatty without being frivolous."—Morning Advertiser.

"These volumes are in every way worthy of Dr. Mackay's previous literary reputation."—Critic.

"Dr. Mackay's volumes are eminently readable, and very amusing."—Press.

"Dr. Mackay's volumes contain much readable and entertaining matter."—Morning Post.

"We can see about this periodical higher promise than we have witnessed in any other enterprise for a long time."—Press.

"The Cornhill Magazine is at last in presence, and from its cover to its last page it is a model of the 'best.' . . . . The Cornhill Magazine at once takes as high a place in literature as its promoter could have desired."—Literary Gazette.

"We came to the perusal of the Cornhill Magazine with great expectations: it has surpassed them all. A new and glorious light has risen on the literary horizon."—Illustrated News of the World.

"It is obvious from the character of the articles, the reputation of the writers, the illustrations, paper, and press-work, that Messrs. Smith, Elder, and Co. intend the Cornhill Magazine to be one of the permanent institutions of the country. It is a marvel of cheapness, and a model of excellence."—Notes and Queries.

"It is almost impossible to imagine any further development, either in quality or quantity, of the periodical literature of this country than that which is attained in the new monthly serial issued from the house of Smith, Elder, and Co."—Sunday Times.

"The first number of the Cornhill Magazine has fulfilled the high anticipations which rumour had excited. It is a marvel of excellence and cheapness."—Illustrated Times.

"The first number of the Cornhill Magazine has made its appearance, and in the record of serial literature it has perhaps no rival in success."—Liverpool Courier.

"The Cornhill Magazine possesses the elements of success in a remarkable degree."—Dublin Daily Express.

in 1858-59.

By Sir John Bowring,

Governor of Hong Kong, and H.M.'s Plenipotentiary in China.

Demy 8vo, with numerous Illustrations, price 18*s.* cloth.

"The work of Sir John Bowring on the Philippine Islands is exhaustive in scope, if not in substance. It does not pretend to set forth all that is known of the islands; but, in a series of condensed chapters, connected together by the author's reminiscences, presents a brilliant view of that rich region of sun and colour."—Athenæum.

"Anything coming from the pen of the ex-Governor of Hong Kong is entitled to a welcome and a hearing. He has brought back a fund of information of the utmost value, ranging over the four heads of history, politics, literature, and commerce. The information it contains is of the highest value. It is profusely illustrated."—Morning Post.

"This book upon the Philippine Islands is very welcome, because it describes a part of the world, about which very little is really known."—Critic.

Life in Spain.

"Mr. Thornbury's book will be acceptable to a very large class of readers."—Morning Post.

"The book is to be recommended as a wholesome body of light reading, from which plenty of substantial knowledge may be gleaned."—Examiner.

"The sketches of character with which this volume abounds are amusing and effective."—Morning Herald.

Heathen and Holy Lands;

Or, Sunny Days on the Salween, Nile, and Jordan.

By Captain J. P. Briggs, Bengal Army.

Post 8vo, price 12*s.* cloth.

"Freshly and naturally written; the landscapes are graphic, and the personal anecdotes are adventurous."—Daily News.

"This volume has the peculiarity that it introduces us into the Holy Land from the other side of the world. . . . . The Captain's descriptions are those of an eye-witness, and of a keenly observant one. They are admirably graphic, full of genuine enthusiasm, and of fine feeling."—Illustrated News of the World.

"It is seldom we meet with a book of travels so original as this."—Leader.

"This book is extremely well written, and its descriptions have a vigorous freshness about them which would reflect no discredit upon a much more 'practised' hand.—Morning Herald.

Through Norway with a Knapsack.

By W. M. Williams.

With Six Coloured Views.

Second Edition, post 8vo, price 12*s.*, cloth.

"Mr. Williams will be an excellent guide to all who wish to travel as he did, on foot, and with the least possible expense. They may also place thorough reliance on all he says, his good sense never allowing his enthusiasm to dazzle him and delude his followers. It is a useful and trustworthy book."—Athenæum.

"The book is amusing; the author saw much that was new. There is frank graphic writing, and much pleasant thinking, in his volume, which is elegantly produced, and liberally illustrated with tinted views and woodcuts."—Examiner.

"'Through Norway with a Knapsack' is a work of intrinsic interest, very instructive and amusing. Mr. Williams is a model pedestrian traveller, and his book is the best guide we know of for those who intend to explore Norway on foot."—Spectator.

"A very instructive book on Norway, and the manners and customs of its inhabitants."—Literary Gazette.

"Every chapter of it will be read with interest."—Morning Post.

Voyage to Japan,

Kamtschatka, Siberia, Tartary, and the Coast of China, in H.M.S. Barracouta.

By J. M. Tronson, R.N.

8vo, with Charts and Views. 18*s.* cloth.

"The able and intelligent officer, whose work is before us, supplies the first authentic information on the present state of Japan and the neighbouring settlements. . . . An extremely interesting book."—Athenæum.

"The book possesses all the qualities of a book of travels, with the prominent advantage of breaking comparatively, and in some instances altogether, new ground."—Illustrated London News.

"Mr. Tronson writes well, and imparts a great deal of new and useful information. The clear and beautiful charts and sketches, accompanying the volume, are of great value."—Globe.

"It contains a great deal that all the world ought now to know."—Morning Herald.

"We cordially recommend it."—British Quarterly Review.

To Cuba and Back.

By R. H. Dana,

Author of "Two Years before the Mast," &c.

Post 8vo. Price 7*s.* cloth.

"Mr. Dana's book is so bright and luscious, so pictorial and cheerful, so essentially pleasant and refreshing, that even the rule of a Spanish captain-general appears tolerable where the subjects are so courteous, and the strangers so gracefully petted. Mr. Dana has a pen to paint such pictures well. His voyage and residence occupied scarcely a month, yet he has written a volume not only fascinating from its warmth and glitter as a narrative, but also intelligent, instructive, and of obvious integrity."—Athenæum.

"Mr. Dana does not spare his faculty of description. The pictures he gives of the Cuban metropolis itself, with its tropical luxuries and laziness, its dirty and dainty ways of existence, the Spanish grandiosity of its national manner, and the pettiness of its national character, are pleasantly and forcibly drawn. A coasting voyage to Matanzas, and a railroad journey, brought him into closer contact with the essential characteristics of the country and its history."—Saturday Review.

Life and Liberty in America.

By Dr. C. Mackay.

Second Edition, 2 vols. post 8vo, with Ten Tinted Illustrations, price 21*s.*

"A bright, fresh, and hopeful book, worthy of the author, whose songs are oftenest heard on the Atlantic. Dr. Mackay writes as healthily as he sings; describing 'Life' as he saw it, and 'Liberty' as he studied it, in the North and in the South."—Athenæum.

"We recommend these volumes to perusal, as the result of careful and diligent observation, assisted by personal association, well calculated to facilitate the attainment of truth."—Leader.

"Dr. Mackay's volumes are eminently readable and amusing."—Press.

Life in Tuscany.

By Mabel Sharman Crawford.

With Two Views, post 8vo. Price 10*s.* 6*d.* cloth.

"There are many traces of quiet, genial humour, brilliant and harmless as summer lightning, which agreeably relieve the more serious portions of the work. Miss Crawford's reflections are as sound and practical as her perceptions are lively and acute, and she has succeeded in contributing a really valuable addition to that otherwise redundant department of literature."—Press.

"The peasant life in Tuscany has, perhaps, not been so well photographed before."—Athenæum.

Narrative of the Mission

From the Governor-General of India to the Court of Ava in 1855.
With Notices of the Country, Government, and People.

By Captain Henry Yule, Bengal Engineers.

Imperial 8vo, with Twenty-four Plates (Twelve coloured), Fifty Woodcuts, and Four Maps. Elegantly bound in cloth, with gilt edges. Price 2*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*

"Captain Yule, in the preparation of the splendid volume before us, has availed himself of the labours of those who preceded him. To all who are desirous of possessing the best and fullest account that has ever been given to the public, of a great, and hitherto little known region of the globe, the interesting, conscientious, and well-written work of Captain Yule will have a deep interest, while to the political economist, geographer, and merchant, it will be indispensable."—Examiner.

"A stately volume in gorgeous golden covers. Such a book is in our times a rarity. Large, massive, and beautiful in itself, it is illustrated by a sprinkling of elegant woodcuts, and by a series of admirable tinted lithographs. . . . . We have read it with curiosity and gratification, as a fresh, full, and luminous report upon the condition of one of the most interesting divisions of Asia beyond the Ganges."—Athenæum.

Hong Kong to Manilla.

By Henry T. Ellis, R.N.

Post 8vo, with Fourteen Illustrations. Price 12*s.* cloth.

"The narrative fulfils the object of the author, which is to present a lively account of what he saw, heard, and did during a holiday run to a rarely visited place."—Spectator.

"Mr. Ellis has given to the public a most valuable and interesting work upon a race and country little known to English readers."—Illustrated News of the World.

Of the Madras Army, F.R.G.S., M.A.I.

Imperial 4to, with Fourteen Plates and numerous Illustrations, including Eight Coloured Fac-Similes of Reliques of Antique Art. Price Two Guineas.

"It is a volume which deserves the careful attention of every student of classical antiquity. No one can fail to be pleased with a work which has so much to attract the eye and to gratify the love of beauty and elegance in design. . . . .

The book is got up with great care and taste, and forms one of the handsomest works that have recently issued from the English press."—Saturday Review.

Captivity of Russian Princesses in the Caucasus.

Translated from the Russian by H. S. Edwards.

With an authentic Portrait of Shamil, a Plan of his House, and a Map. Post 8vo. Price 10*s.* 6*d.* cloth.

"A book than which there are few novels more interesting. It is a romance of the Caucasus. The account of life in the house of Shamil is full and very entertaining; and of Shamil himself we see much."—Examiner.

"The story is certainly one of the most curious we have read; it contains the best popular notice of the social polity of Shamil and the manners of his people."—Leader.

"The narrative is well worth reading."—Athenæum.

Author of "North and South," &c.

Fourth Edition, revised, one vol., with a Portrait of Miss Brontë and a View of Haworth Parsonage. Price 7*s.* 6*d.*; morocco elegant, 14*s.*

"All the secrets of the literary workmanship of the authoress of 'Jane Eyre' are unfolded in the course of this extraordinary narrative."—Times.

"Mrs. Gaskell's account of Charlotte Brontë and her family is one of the profoundest tragedies of modern life."—Spectator.

"Mrs. Gaskell has produced one of the best biographies of a woman by a woman which we can recall to mind."—Athenæum.

"If any one wishes to see how a woman possessed of the highest intellectual power can disregard every temptation which intellect throws in the way of women—how generously and nobly a human being can live under the pressure of accumulated misfortune—the record is at hand in 'The Life of Charlotte Brontë.'"—Saturday Review.

"Mrs. Gaskell has done her work well. Her narrative is simple, direct, intelligible, unaffected. No one else could have paid so tender and discerning a tribute to the memory of Charlotte Brontë."—Fraser's Magazine.

Biography—continued.

Life of Lord Metcalfe.

By John William Kaye.

New Edition, in Two vols., post 8vo, with Portrait. Price 12*s.* cloth.

"A work which occupies the highest rank among biographies of the great men of modern times."—Observer.

"The new edition contains new matter of the utmost value and interest."—Critic.

"One of the most valuable biographies of the present day. This revised edition has several fresh passages of high interest, now first inserted from among Lord Metcalfe's papers, in which his clear prescience of the dangers that threatened our Indian empire is remarkably shown."—Economist.

"This edition is revised with care and judgment. Mr. Kaye has judiciously set forth Lord Metcalfe's views of the insecurity of our Indian empire."—Globe.

"A much improved edition of one of the most interesting political biographies in English literature."—National Review.

Life of Sir John Malcolm, G.C.B.

By John William Kaye.

Two vols. 8vo, with Portrait. Price 36*s.* cloth.

"The biography is replete with interest and information, deserving to be perused by the student of Indian history, and sure to recommend itself to the general reader."—Athenæum.

"One of the most interesting of the recent biographies of our great Indian statesmen."—National Review.

"This book deserves to participate in the popularity which it was the good fortune of Sir John Malcolm to enjoy."—Edinburgh Review.

"Mr. Kaye's biography is at once a contribution to the history of our policy and dominion in the East, and a worthy memorial of one of those wise and large-hearted men whose energy and principle have made England great."—British Quarterly Review.

The Life of J. Deacon Hume.

By the Rev. Charles Badham.

Post 8vo. Price 9*s.* cloth.

"A masterly piece of biographical narrative. To minute and conscientious industry in searching out facts, Mr. Badham conjoins the attractions of a graceful style and a sincere liking for the task he has in hand. He has produced one of the most useful and judicious biographies extant in our literature, peculiarly full of beauties, and peculiarly free from faults."—Atlas.

"It is well that the world's attention should be called to such a man, and that the particulars of his character and career should be preserved in a biography."—Spectator.

The Life of Mahomet

And History of Islam to the Era of the Hegira.

By William Muir, Esq., Bengal Civil Service.

Volumes 1 and 2. 8vo. Price 32*s.* cloth.

"The most perfect life of Mahomet in the English language, or perhaps in any other. . . . The work is at once learned and interesting, and it cannot fail to be eagerly perused by all persons having any pretensions to historical knowledge."—Observer.

The Autobiography of Lutfullah,

A Mohamedan Gentleman; with an Account of his Visit to England.

Edited by E. B. Eastwick, Esq.

Third Edition, small post 8vo. Price 5*s.* cloth.

"This is the freshest and most original work that it has been our good fortune to meet with for long. It bears every trace of being a most genuine account of the feelings and doings of the author. Lutfullah is by no means an ordinary specimen of his race."—Economist.

"Read fifty volumes of travel, and a thousand imitations of the Oriental novel, and you will not get the flavour of Eastern life and thought, or the zest of its romance, so perfectly as in Lutfullah's book."—Leader.

Art.

WORKS OF MR. RUSKIN.

The Elements of Perspective.

With 80 Diagrams, crown 8vo. Price 3*s.* 6*d.* cloth.

"Mr. Ruskin, seeing the want of a clear and accurate code on the subject, has set himself to the task of arranging and explaining the necessary rules in a form as nearly approaching the ideal of a popular treatise as can be managed consistently with the object of practical completeness. No better way of blending the two purposes could, we believe, have been found than the way Mr. Ruskin ingeniously discovered and has ably worked out. A careful perusal of the work will enable the intelligent student not only to solve perspective problems of a complexity greater than the ordinary rules will reach, but to obtain a clue to many important laws of pictorial effect less than of outline."—Daily News.

"This book, provided by Mr. Ruskin for the use of schools, bears its recommendation on the title-page. The rules are arranged in a short mathematical form, which will be intelligible to students reasonably advanced in general knowledge."—Leader.

"The student will find in this little book all that is necessary to lay the foundation of a thorough scientific knowledge of perspective."—Illustrated News of the World.

"To the practical student it is likely to prove a most valuable manual."—Literary Gazette.

The Elements of Drawing.

Sixth Thousand, crown 8vo, with Illustrations drawn by the Author. Price 7*s.* 6*d.* cloth.

"The rules are clearly and fully laid down; and the earlier exercises always conducive to the end by simple and unembarrassing means. The whole volume is full of liveliness."—Spectator.

"We close this book with a feeling that, though nothing supersedes a master, yet that no student of art should launch forth without this work as a compass."—Athenæum.

"It will be found not only an invaluable acquisition to the student, but agreeable and instructive reading for any one who wishes to refine his perceptions of natural scenery, and of its worthiest artistic representations."—Economist.

"Original as this treatise is, it cannot fail to be at once instructive and suggestive."—Literary Gazette.

"The most useful and practical book on the subject which has ever come under our notice."—Press.

Modern Painters.

Vol. I., 6th Edition. Price 18*s.* cloth. Imperial 8vo.

Vol. II., 4th Edition. Price 10*s.* 6*d.* cloth.

Vol. III. OF MANY THINGS, with Eighteen Illustrations drawn by the Author, and engraved on Steel. Price 38*s.* cloth.

Vol. IV. ON MOUNTAIN BEAUTY. Imperial 8vo, with Thirty-five Illustrations engraved on Steel, and 116 Woodcuts, drawn by the Author. Price 2*l.* 10*s.* cloth.

"A generous and impassioned review of the works of living painters. A hearty and earnest work, full of deep thought, and developing great and striking truths in art."—British Quarterly Review.

"Mr. Ruskin's work will send the painter more than ever to the study of nature; will train men who have always been delighted spectators of nature, to be also attentive observers. Our critics will learn to admire, and mere admirers will learn how to criticise: thus a public will be educated."—Blackwood's Magazine.

"Every one who cares about nature, or poetry, or the story of human development—every one who has a tinge of literature or philosophy, will find something that is for him in these volumes."—Westminster Review.

"Mr. Ruskin is in possession of a clear and penetrating mind; he is undeniably practical in his fundamental ideas; full of the deepest reverence for all that appears to him beautiful and holy. His style is, as usual, clear, bold, racy. Mr. Ruskin is one of the first writers of the day."—Economist.

"All, it is to be hoped, will read the book for themselves. They will find it well worth a careful perusal."—Saturday Review.

"Mr. Ruskin is the most eloquent and thought-awakening writer on nature in its relation with art, and the most potent influence by the pen, of young artists, whom this country can boast."—National Review.

"This work is eminently suggestive, full of new thoughts, of brilliant descriptions of scenery, and eloquent moral application of them."—New Quarterly Review.

"Mr. Ruskin has deservedly won for himself a place in the first rank of modern writers upon the theory of the fine arts."—Eclectic Review.

"The fourth volume of Mr. Ruskin's elaborate work treats chiefly of mountain scenery, and discusses at length the principles involved in the pleasure we derive from mountains and their pictorial representation. The singular beauty of his style, the hearty sympathy with all forms of natural loveliness, the profusion of his illustrations form irresistible attractions."—Daily News.

"Considered as an illustrated volume, the fourth is the most remarkable which Mr. Ruskin has yet issued. The plates and woodcuts are profuse, and include numerous drawings of mountain form by the author, which prove Mr. Ruskin to be essentially an artist. He is an unique man, both among artists and writers."—Spectator.

Such a writer is a national possession. He adds to our store of knowledge and enjoyment."—Leader.

The Two Paths:

Being Lectures on Art, and its relation to Manufactures and Decoration.

One vol., crown 8vo, with Two Steel Engravings. Price 7*s.* 6*d.* cloth.

"The meaning of the title of this book is, that there are two courses open to the artist, one of which will lead him to all that is noble in art, and will incidentally exalt his moral nature; while the other will deteriorate his work and help to throw obstacles in the way of his individual morality. . . . They all contain many useful distinctions, acute remarks, and valuable suggestions, and are everywhere lit up with that glow of fervid eloquence which has so materially contributed to the author's reputation."—Press.

"The 'Two Paths' contains much eloquent description, places in a clear light some forgotten or neglected truths, and, like all Mr. Ruskin's books, is eminently suggestive."—Literary Gazette.

"This book is well calculated to encourage the humblest worker, and stimulate him to artistic effort."—Leader.

The Stones of Venice.

Complete in Three Volumes, Imperial 8vo, with Fifty-three Plates and numerous Woodcuts, drawn by the Author. Price 5*l.* 15*s.* 6*d.* cloth.

EACH VOLUME MAY BE HAD SEPARATELY.

Vol. I. THE FOUNDATIONS, with 21 Plates. Price 2*l.* 2*s.* 2nd Edition.
Vol. II. THE SEA STORIES, with 20 Plates. Price 2*l.* 2*s.*
Vol. III. THE FALL, with 12 Plates. Price 1*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.*

"The 'Stones of Venice' is the production of an earnest, religious, progressive, and informed mind. The author of this essay on architecture has condensed it into a poetic apprehension, the fruit of awe of God, and delight in nature; a knowledge, love, and just estimate of art; a holding fast to fact and repudiation of hearsay; an historic breadth, and a fearless challenge of existing social problems, whose union we know not where to find paralleled."—Spectator.

"This book is one which, perhaps, no other man could have written, and one for which the world ought to be and will be thankful. It is in the highest degree eloquent, acute, stimulating to thought, and fertile in suggestion. It will, we are convinced, elevate taste and intellect, raise the tone of moral feeling, kindle benevolence towards men, and increase the love and fear of God."—Times.

The Seven Lamps of Architecture.

Second Edition, with Fourteen Plates drawn by the Author. Imp. 8vo. Price 1*l.* 1*s.* cloth.

"By 'The Seven Lamps of Architecture,' we understand Mr. Ruskin to mean the Seven fundamental and cardinal laws, the observance of and obedience to which are indispensable to the architect, who would deserve the name. The politician, the moralist, the divine, will find in it ample store of instructive matter, as well as the artist. The author of this work belongs to a class of thinkers of whom we have too few amongst us."—Examiner.

Lectures on Architecture and Painting.

With Fourteen Cuts, drawn by the Author. Second Edition, crown 8vo. Price 8*s.* 6*d.* cloth.

"Mr. Ruskin's lectures—eloquent, graphic, and impassioned—exposing and ridiculing some of the vices of our present system of building, and exciting his hearers by strong motives of duty and pleasure to attend to architecture—are very successful."—Economist.

"We conceive it to be impossible that any intelligent persons could listen to the lectures, however they might differ from the judgments asserted and from the general propositions laid down without an elevating influence and an arousing enthusiasm."—Spectator.

The Political Economy of Art.

Price 2*s.* 6*d.* cloth.

"A most able, eloquent, and well-timed work. We hail it with satisfaction, thinking it calculated to do much practical good, and we cordially recommend it to our readers."—Witness.

"We never quit Mr. Ruskin without being the better for what he has told us, and therefore we recommend this little volume, like all his other works, to the perusal of our readers."—Economist.

"This book, daring, as it is, glances keenly at principles, of which some are among the articles of ancient codes, while others are evolving slowly to the light."—Leader.

Religious.

Expositions of St. Paul's Epistles to the Corinthians.

By the late Rev. Fred. W. Robertson.

One thick Volume, post 8vo. Price 10*s.* 6*d.* cloth.

"These lectures were the last discourses that Mr. Robertson ever delivered from his pulpit. High as is the standard of thoughtfulness and originality which we expect in everything that comes from the pen of this preacher, these pages are not unworthy of that high standard. This single volume in itself would establish a reputation for its writer."

Sermons:

By the late Rev. Fred. W. Robertson, A.M.,

Incumbent of Trinity Chapel, Brighton.

FIRST SERIES.—Seventh Edition, post 8vo. Price 9*s.* cloth.
SECOND SERIES.—Seventh Edition. Price 9*s.* cloth.
THIRD SERIES.—Fifth Edition, post 8vo, with Portrait. Price 9*s.* cloth.

"There are many persons, and their number increases every year, to whom Robertson's writings are the most stable, exhaustless, and satisfactory form of religious teaching which the nineteenth century has given—the most wise, suggestive, and practical."—Saturday Review.

"There must be a great and true heart, where there is a great and true preacher. And in that, beyond everything else, lay the secret of Mr. Robertson's influence. We feel that a brother man is speaking to us as brother men; that we are listening, not to the measured words of a calm, cool thinker, but to the passionate deep-toned voice of an earnest human soul."—Edinburgh Christian Magazine.

"These sermons are full of thought and beauty There is not a sermon in the series that does not furnish evidence of originality without extravagance, of discrimination without tediousness, and of piety without cant or conventionalism."—British Quarterly.

"We recommend the whole of the volumes to the perusal of our readers. They will find in them thought of a rare and beautiful description, an earnestness of mind steadfast in the search of truth, and a charity pure and all-embracing."—Economist.

"They are very remarkable compositions. The thoughts are often very striking, and entirely out of the track of ordinary sermonising."—Guardian.

India and the East.

Christianity in India.

By John William Kaye.

8vo. Price 16*s.* cloth.

"Mr. Kaye has written a history of the development of Christianity in India by all its agencies and all its manifestations. . . . His whole narrative is eloquent and informing, and he has again made a valuable use of his great opportunities and indisputable talents, so that his book will probably become a standard authority."—Times.

"The author traces the history of Christian Missions in India from their earliest commencement down to the present time, with a light and graceful pen, and is not wearisomely minute, but judiciously discriminative."—Athenæum.

"Mr. Kaye's is, in many respects, an able book and it is likely to prove a very useful one. Mr. Kaye is not only most instructive from his familiarity with all points of detail, but he sees and judges everything as it was seen and judged by the great statesmen whose wisdom has made British government possible in India."—Saturday Review.

Personal Adventures

During the Indian Rebellion in Rohilcund, Futtehghur, and Oude.

By W. Edwards, Esq., B.C.S.

Fourth Edition, post 8vo. Price 6*s.* cloth.

"For touching incidents, hair-breadth 'scapes, and the pathos of suffering almost incredible, there has appeared nothing like this little book of personal adventures. For the first time we seem to realize the magnitude of the afflictions which have befallen our unhappy countrymen in the East. The terrible drama comes before us, and we are by turns bewildered with horror, stung to fierce indignation, and melted to tears. . . . . We have here a tale of suffering such as may have been equalled, but never surpassed. These real adventures, which no effort of the imagination can surpass, will find a sympathising public."—Athenæum.

"Mr. Edwards's narrative is one of the most deeply interesting episodes of a story of which the least striking portions cannot be read without emotion. He tells his story with simplicity and manliness, and it bears the impress of that earnest and unaffected reverence to the will and hand of God, which was the stay and comfort of many other brave hearts."—Guardian.

"The narrative of Mr. Edwards's suffering and escapes is full of interest; it tells many a painful tale, but it also exhibits a man patient under adversity, and looking to the God and Father of us all for guidance and support."—Eclectic Review.

England and her Soldiers.

By Harriet Martineau.

With Three Plates of Illustrative Diagrams. 1 vol, crown 8vo, price 9*s.* cloth.

"The purpose with which Miss Martineau has written about England and her soldiers is purely practical, and equally so is the manner in which she has treated the subject. There is not in her whole volume one line of invective against individuals or classes. No candid reader can deny that this effort has been made opportunely, ably, and discreetly."—Spectator.

"The book is remarkable for the clear, comprehensive way in which the subject is treated. Great credit is due to Miss Martineau for having so compactly, so spiritedly, with so much truth of detail, and at the same time so much force, placed the matter before the public in this interesting and well-timed volume."—Shipping and Mercantile Gazette.

"Miss Martineau has worked out her subject with courage, power, and conscientiousness. Faithful in fact and rich in suggestion, she has given us in this volume a very valuable addition to our present store of knowledge as the conduct and condition of the Crimean troops."—Literary Gazette.

Narrative of the Siege of Delhi.

By the Rev. J. E. W. Rotton,

Chaplain to the Delhi Field Force.

Post 8vo, with a Plan of the City and Siege Works. Price 10*s.* 6*d.* cloth.

"A simple and touching statement, which bears the impress of truth in every word. It supplies some of those personal anecdotes and minute details which bring the events home to the understanding."—Athenæum.

"'The Chaplain's Narrative' is remarkable for its pictures of men in a moral and religious aspect, during the progress of a harassing siege and when suddenly stricken down by the enemy or disease."—Spectator.

The Defence of Lucknow:

By Captain Thomas F. Wilson, 13th Bengal N.I.

Assistant Adjutant-General.

Sixth Thousand. With Plan. Small post 8vo. Price 2*s.* 6*d.*

"The Staff-Officer's Diary is simple and brief, and has a special interest, inasmuch as it gives a fuller account than we have elsewhere seen of those operations which were the chief human means of salvation to our friends in Lucknow. The Staff-Officer brings home to us, by his details, the nature of that underground contest, upon the result of which the fate of the beleaguered garrison especially depended."—Examiner.

Eight Months' Campaign against the Bengal Sepoys during the Mutiny, 1857.

By Colonel George Bourchier, C.B.

Bengal Horse Artillery.

With Plans. Post 8vo. Price 7*s.* 6*d.* cloth.

"Col. Bourchier describes the various operations with a modest forgetfulness of self, as pleasing and as rare as the clear manly style in which they are narrated."—Literary Gazette.

"Col. Bourchier has given a right manly, fair, and forcible statement of events, and the reader will derive much pleasure and instruction from his pages."—Athenæum.

Legal.

Annals of British Legislation:

A Classified Summary of Parliamentary Papers.

Edited by Leone Levi.

The yearly issue consists of 1,000 pages, super-royal 8vo, and the Subscription is Two Guineas, payable in advance. The Thirty-fifth Part is just issued, commencing the Third Year's Issue. Vols. I. to IV. may be had. Price 4*l.* 4*s.* cloth.

"A series that will, if it be always managed as it now is by Professor Levi, last as long as there remains a Legislature in Great Britain. These Annals are to give the essence of work done and information garnered for the State during each legislative year, a summary description of every Act passed, a digest of the vital facts contained in every Blue Book issued, and of all documents relating to the public business of the country. The series will live, while generations of men die, if it be maintained in its old age as ably and as conscientiously as it is now in its youth."—Examiner.

"The idea was admirable, nor does the execution fall short of the plan. To accomplish this effectively, and at the same time briefly, was not an easy task; but Professor Levi has undertaken it with great success. The work is essentially a guide. It will satisfy those persons who refer to it merely for general purposes, while it will direct the research of others whose investigations take a wider range."—Athenæum.

Manual of the Mercantile Law

Of Great Britain and Ireland.

By Leone Levi, Esq.

8vo. Price 12*s.* cloth.

"It is sound, clear, and practical. . . . Its contents are strictly those of a manual—a handbook for law chambers, offices, and counting-houses; requisite in most of such places, and superfluous in none."—Athenæum.

"Its simplicity and faithfulness make it an extremely serviceable book."—Examiner.

"An admirable work of the kind."—Law Times.

"It presents a fair summary of the law on the great subject of which it treats."—Law Magazine.

"Mr. Thomson treats of the immediate effects of war; of enemies and hostile property; of prizes and privateers; of license, ransom, re-capture, and salvage of neutrality, contraband of war, blockade, right of search, armed neutralities &c., &c."—Economist.

Fiction.

Against Wind and Tide.

By Holme Lee,

Author of "Sylvan Holt's Daughter." 3 vols.

"The reputation which 'Kathie Brande' and 'Sylvan Holt's Daughter' won for their author will be crowned by 'Against Wind and Tide.' A more charming novel has not proceeded of late years from the press."—Morning Herald.

"This novel is by many degrees the best specimen of fiction that has been placed in our hands."—Literary Gazette.

"This is one of the few good novels that deserve permanent life."—Examiner.

"Full of animated scenes and rich in clever description."—Press.

"To all who appreciate a powerfully concentrated work, this one may be fairly recommended."—Sun.

The Cousins' Courtship.

By John R. Wise.

Two vols. [Now ready.

"The 'Cousins' Courtship' is a kind of prose idyll, in which an earnest, pure, simple love is developed without any hysterical romance. To a decided talent for satirical illustration and comment, Mr. Wise unites a nice observation, delicate reflections, and a sympathy for what is beautiful. Its cleverness, its genial tone, its playful satire, its scholarly yet perfectly easy and natural language, with its vivid portraiture of scenery, entitle the 'Cousins' Courtship' to a grateful recognition."—Spectator.

"We are well pleased with Mr. Wise's novel. Those who begin to read the 'Cousin's Courtship' will finish it. We rarely meet with one possessed of so many good qualities."—Morning Post.

"A very clever novel: it possesses some excellent qualities. The merits of the book are great. It is thoroughly true: we take it, indeed, that it is a collection of personal experiences. Mr. Wise can fairly lay claim to the merit of vivid and powerful description of what he has seen."—Morning Herald.

The Fool of Quality.

By Henry Brooke.

New and Revised Edition, with Biographical Preface by the Rev. C. Kingsley, Rector of Eversley.

Two vols, post 8vo, with Portrait of the Author, price 21*s.*

"If the 'Fool of Quality' be perused with reference to the period at which it was written, as well as from its author's point of view, and if it be considered as the earnest, heartfelt production of an accomplished gentleman and a sincere philanthropist, whose life was devoted to efforts to do good, its excellences, which are many, will be admitted."—Illustrated London News.

Phantastes:

A Faerie Romance for Men and Women.

By George Macdonald.

Post 8vo. Price 10*s.* 6*d.* cloth.

"The work is one which will form a source of agreeable reading to many. It is replete with wild imagery, strange flights of fancy, and beautiful descriptions of nature."—Daily Telegraph.

"The whole book is instinct with poetry, with delicate perception of the hidden emotions of the soul, with thought, and with ideal truth. The story is in fact a parable—an allegory of human life, its temptations and its sorrows."—Literary Gazette.

Esmond.

By W. M. Thackeray.

A New Edition, being the third, in 1 vol. crown 8vo. Price 6*s.* cloth.

"The book has the great charm of reality. Queen Anne's colonel writes his life—and a very interesting life it is—just as a Queen Anne's colonel might be supposed to have written it. Mr. Thackeray has selected for his hero a very noble type of the cavalier softening into the man of the eighteenth century, and for his heroine, one of the sweetest women that ever breathed from canvas or from book since Raffaelle painted nd Shakspeare wrote."—Spectator.

"Once more we feel that we have before us a masculine and thoroughly English writer, uniting the power of subtle analysis, with a strong volition and a moving eloquence—an eloquence which has gained in richness and harmony. 'Esmond' must be read, not for its characters, but for its romantic plot, its spirited grouping, and its many thrilling utterances of the anguish of the human heart."—Athenæum.

Cousin Stella;

Or, Conflict.

By the Author of "Violet Bank."

Three volumes.

"An excellent novel, written with great care; the interest is well sustained to the end, and the characters are all life-like. It is an extremely well-written and well-conceived story, with quiet power and precision of touch, with freshness of interest and great merit."—Athenæum.

"'Cousin Stella' has the merit, now becoming rarer and rarer, of a comparative novelty in its subject; the interest of which will secure for this novel a fair share of popularity."—Saturday Review.

Confidences.

By the Author of "Rita."

"This new novel, by the author of 'Rita,' displays the same combination of ease and power in the delineation of character, the same life-like dialogue, and the same faculty of constructing an interesting story."—Spectator.

"Decidedly both good and interesting. The book has a fresh and pleasant air about it: it is written in an excellent tone, and there are touches of pathos here and there which we must rank with a higher style of composition than that usually attained in works of this class."—New Quarterly Review.

Trust for Trust.

By A. J. Barrowcliffe,
Author of "Amberhill."

Three volumes.

"It is seldom we find, even in this great age of novel writing, so much that is pleasant and so little to object to as in 'Trust for Trust.' It contains much original thought and fresh humour."—Leader.

"The story is admirably developed. The interest never flags, the incidents are natural without being commonplace, and the men and woman talk and act like human beings."—Press.

"This novel will find a great many admirers."—Leader.

THE

Dennes of Daundelyonn.

By Mrs. Charles J. Proby.

Three volumes.

"This is a novel of more than average merit. There is considerable knowledge of character, power of description, and quiet social satire, exhibited in its pages."—Press.

"'The Dennes of Daundelyonn' is a very readable book, and will be immensely popular. . . . It has many beauties which deservedly recommend it to the novel reader."—Critic.

The Two Homes.

By the Author of "The Heir of Vallis."

Three volumes.

"There is a great deal that is very good in this book—a great deal of good feeling and excellent design. . . . There are some good pictures of Madeira, and of life and society there; and there are evidences of much painstaking and talent."—Athenæum.

"'The Two Homes' is a very clever novel. . . Madeira furnishes Mr. Mathews with a fertile theme for his descriptive powers. The dialogue is good: the characters all speak and act consistently with their natures."—Leader.

The Moors and the Fens.

By F. G. Trafford.

Three volumes.

"This novel stands out much in the same way that 'Jane Eyre' did. . . . The characters are drawn by a mind which can realize fictitious characters with minute intensity."—Saturday Review.

"It is seldom that a first fiction is entitled to such applause as is 'The Moors and the Fens,' and we shall look anxiously for the writer's next essay."—Critic.

Lost and Won.

By Georgiana M. Craik,
Author of "Riverston."

One volume. Second Edition.

"Nothing superior to this novel has appeared during the present season."—Leader.

"Miss Craik's new story is a good one and in point of ability above the average of ladies' novels."—Daily News.

"The language is good, the narrative spirited, the characters are fairly delineated, and the dialogue has considerable dramatic force."—Saturday Review.

"This is an improvement on Miss Craik's first work. The story is more compact and more interesting."—Athenæum.

An Old Debt.

By Florence Dawson.

Two volumes.

"A powerfully written novel; one of the best which has recently proceeded from a female hand. . . . The dialogue is vigorous and spirited."—Morning Post.

"There is an energy and vitality about this work which distinguish it from the common head of novels. Its terse vigour sometimes recals Miss Brontë, but in some respects Miss Florence Dawson is decidedly superior to the author of 'Jane Eyre.'"—Saturday Review.

"This novel is written with great care and painstaking; it evinces considerable powers of reflection. The style is good, and the author possesses the power of depicting emotion."—Athenæum.

"A very good seasonable novel."—Leader.

My Lady.

A Tale of Modern Life.

Two volumes.

"'My Lady' is a fine specimen of an English matron, exhibiting that union of strength and gentleness, of common sense and romance, of energy and grace, which nearly approaches our ideal of womanhood."—Press.

"'My Lady' evinces charming feeling and delicacy of touch. It is a novel that will be read with interest."—Athenæum.

"The story is told throughout with great strength of feeling, is well written, and has a plot which is by no means common-place."—Examiner.

"There is some force and a good deal of freshness in 'My Lady.' The characters are distinctly drawn, and often wear an appearance of individuality, or almost personality. The execution is fresh and powerful."—Spectator.

"It is not in every novel we can light upon a style so vigorously graceful—upon an intelligence so refined without littleness, so tenderly truthful, which has sensibility rather than poetry; but which is also most subtly and searchingly powerful."—Dublin University Magazine.

Gaston Bligh.

By L. S. Lavenu,
Author of "Erlesmere."

Two volumes.

"The story is told with great power; the whole book sparkles with esprit; and the characters talk like gentlemen and ladies. It is very enjoyable reading."—Press.

"'Gaston Bligh' is a good story, admirably told, full of stirring incident, sustaining to the close the interest of a very ingenious plot, and abounding in clever sketches of character. It sparkles with wit, and will reward perusal."—Critic.

Sylvan Holt's Daughter.

By Holme Lee,

Author of "Kathie Brande," &c.

Second Edition. 3 vols.

"The well-established reputation of Holme Lee, as a novel writer, will receive an additional glory from the publication of 'Sylvan Holt's Daughter.' It is a charming tale of country life and character."—Globe.

"There is much that is attractive in 'Sylvan Holt's Daughter,' much that is graceful and refined, much that is fresh, healthy, and natural."—Press.

"The conception of the story has a good deal of originality, and the characters avoid commonplace types, without being unnatural or improbable. The heroine herself is charming. It is a novel in which there is much to interest and please."—New Quarterly Review.

"A novel that is well worth reading, and which possesses the cardinal virtue of being extremely interesting."—Athenæum.

"A really sound, good book, highly finished, true to nature, vigorous, passionate, honest, and sincere."—Dublin University Magazine.

The Professor.

By Currer Bell.

Two volumes.

"We think the author's friends have shown sound judgment in publishing the 'Professor,' now that she is gone. . . . It shows the first germs of conception, which afterwards expanded and ripened into the great creations of her imagination. At the same time her advisers were equally right when they counselled her not to publish it in her lifetime. . . . But it abounds in merits."—Saturday Review.

"Anything which throws light upon the growth and composition of such a mind cannot be otherwise than interesting. In the 'Professor' we may discover the germs of many trains of thinking, which afterwards came to be enlarged and illustrated in subsequent and more perfect works."—Critic.

"There is much new insight in it, much extremely characteristic genius, and one character, moreover, of fresher, lighter, and more airy grace."—Economist.

Below the Surface.

Three volumes.

"The book is unquestionably clever and entertaining. The writer develops from first to last his double view of human life, as coloured by the manners of our age. . . . It is a tale superior to ordinary novels, in its practical application to the phases of actual life."—Athenæum.

"There is a great deal of cleverness in this story; a much greater knowledge of country life and character in its various aspects and conditions than is possessed by nine-tenths of the novelists who undertake to describe it."—Spectator.

"This is a book which possesses the rare merit of being exactly what it claims to be, a story of English country life; and, moreover, a very well told story."—Daily News.

"A more pleasant story we have not read for many a day."—British Quarterly.

Eva Desmond;

Or, Mutation.

Three volumes.

"A more beautiful creation than Eva it would be difficult to imagine. The novel is undoubtedly full of interest."—Morning Post.

"There is power, pathos, and originality in conception and catastrophe."—Leader.

The Three Chances.

By the Author of "The Fair Carew."

Three volumes.

"Some of the characters and romantic situations are strongly marked and peculiarly original. . . . It is the great merit of the authoress that the personages of her tale are human and real."—Leader.

"This novel is of a more solid texture than most of its contemporaries. It is full of good sense, good thought, and good writing."—Statesman.

The Cruellest Wrong of All.

By the Author of "Margaret; or, Prejudice at Home."

One volume.

"The author has a pathetic vein, and there is a tender sweetness in the tone of her narration."—Leader.

"It has the first requisite of a work meant to amuse: it is amusing."—Globe.

Kathie Brande.

A Fireside History of a Quiet Life.

By Holme Lee.

Two volumes.

"'Kathie Brande' is not merely a very interesting novel—it is a very wholesome one, for it teaches virtue by example."—Critic.

"Throughout 'Kathie Brande' there is much sweetness, and considerable power of description."—Saturday Review.

"'Kathie Brande' is intended to illustrate the paramount excellence of duty as a moving principle. It is full of beauties."—Daily News.

The Noble Traytour:

A Chronicle.

Three volumes.

"The story is told with a graphic and graceful pen, and the chronicler has produced a romance not only of great value in a historical point of view, but possessing many claims upon the attention of the scholar, the antiquary, and the general reader."—Post.

"An Elizabethan masquerade. Shakespeare, the Queen, Essex, Raleigh, and a hundred nobles, ladies and knights of the land, appear on the stage. The author has imbued himself with the spirit of the times."—Leader.

Riverston.

By Georgiana M. Craik.

Three volumes.

"Miss Craik is a very lively writer: she has wit, and she has sense, and she has made in the beautiful young governess, with her strong will, saucy independence, and promptness of repartee, an interesting picture."—Press.

"Miss Craik writes well; she can paint character, passions, manners, with considerable effect; her dialogue flows easily and expressively."—Daily News.

"The author shows great command of language, a force and clearness of expression not often met with. . . . We offer a welcome to Miss Craik, and we shall look with interest for her next work."—Athenæum.

FICTION—continued.

Perversion;

Or, the Causes and Consequences of Infidelity.

By the late Rev. W. J. Conybeare.

Three volumes.

"This story has a touching interest, which lingers with the reader after he has closed the book."—Athenæum.

"It is long, very long, since we have read a narrative of more power than this."—British Quarterly Review.

"This is a good and a noble book."—New Quarterly.

Maud Skillicorne's Penance.

By Mary C. Jackson,

Author of "The Story of my Wardship."

Two volumes.

"The style is natural, and displays considerable dramatic power."—Critic.

"It is a well concocted tale, and will be very palatable to novel readers."—Morning Post.

The Roua Pass.

By Erick Mackenzie.

Three volumes.

"It is seldom that we have to notice so good a novel as the 'Roua Pass.' The story is well contrived and well told; the incidents are natural and varied; several of the characters are skilfully drawn, and that of the heroine is fresh, powerful, and original. The Highland scenery, in which the plot is laid, is described with truth and feeling—with a command of language which leaves a vivid impression."—Saturday Review.

"The peculiar charm of the novel is its skilful painting of the Highlands, and of life among the Highlanders. Quick observation and a true sense of the poetry in nature and human life, the author has."—Examiner.

The White House by the Sea:

A Love Story.

By M. Betham-Edwards.

Two volumes.

"A tale of English domestic life. The writing is very good, graceful, and unaffected; it pleases without startling. In the dialogue, people do not harangue, but talk, and talk naturally."—Critic.

Extremes.

By Miss E. W. Atkinson,

Author of "Memoirs of the Queens of Prussia."

Two volumes.

"A nervous and vigorous style, an elaborate delineation of character under many varieties, spirited and well-sustained dialogue, and a carefully-constructed plot; if these have any charms for our readers, they will not forget the swiftly gliding hours passed in perusing 'Extremes.'"—Morning Post.

"'Extremes' is a novel written with a sober purpose, and wound up with a moral. The purpose is to exemplify some of the errors arising from mistaken zeal in religious matters, and the evil consequences that flow from those errors."—Spectator.

Farina:

A Legend of Cologne.

By George Meredith.

One volume.

"A masque of ravishers in steel, of robber knights; of water-women, more ravishing than lovely. It has also a brave and tender deliverer, and a heroine proper for a romance of Cologne. Those who love a real, lively, audacious piece of extravagance, by way of a change, will enjoy 'Farina.'"—Athenæum.

Friends of Bohemia;

Or, Phases of London Life.

By E. M. Whitty,

Author of "The Governing Classes."

Two volumes.

"Mr. Whitty is a genuine satirist, employing satire for a genuine purpose. You laugh with him very much; but the laughter is fruity and ripe in thought. His style is serious, and his cast of mind severe. The author has a merriment akin to that of Jaques and that of Timon."—Athenæum.

The Eve of St. Mark.

A Romance of Venice.

By Thomas Doubleday.

Two volumes.

"'The Eve of St. Mark' is not only well written, but adroitly constructed, and interesting. Its tone is perhaps too gorgeous; its movement is too much that of a masquerade; but a mystery is created, and a very loveable heroine is pourtrayed."—Athenæum.

Stories and Sketches.

By James Payn.

Post 8vo. Price 2*s.* 6*d.* cloth.

"Mr. Payn is gay, spirited, observant, and shows no little knowledge of men and books."—Leader.

"A volume of pleasant reading. Some of the papers have true Attic salt in them."—Literary Gazette.

Life of Charlotte Brontë

(Currer Bell),
Author of "Jane Eyre," &c.
By Mrs. Gaskell.
Price 2*s.* 6*d.*

"We regard this record as a monument of courage and endurance, of suffering and triumph. . . . All the secrets of the literary workmanship of the authoress of 'Jane Eyre' are unfolded in the course of this extraordinary narrative."—Times.

"Mrs. Gaskell has done her work well. Her narrative is simple, direct, intelligible, unaffected. She dwells on her friend's character with womanly tact, thorough understanding, and delicate sisterly tenderness. Many parts of the book cannot be read without deep, even painful emotion; still it is a life always womanly."—Fraser's Magazine.

Lectures on the English Humourists

Of the Eighteenth Century.
By W. M. Thackeray,
Author of "Vanity Fair," "Esmond," "The Virginians," &c.
Price 2*s.* 6*d.* cloth.

"What fine things these lectures contain; what eloquent and subtle sayings; what wise and earnest writing; how delightful are their turns of humour; with what a touching effect in the graver passages the genuine feeling of the man comes out, and how vividly the thoughts are painted, as it were, in graphic and characteristic words."—Examiner.

"This is to us by far the most acceptable of Mr. Thackeray's writings. His graphic style, his philosophical spirit, his analytical powers, his large heartedness, his shrewdness, and his gentleness, have all room to exhibit themselves."—Economist.

British India.

By Harriet Martineau.
Price 2*s.* 6*d.* cloth.

"Lucid, glowing, and instructive essays."—Economist.

"A good compendium of a great subject."—National Review.

"As a handbook to the history of India it is the best that has yet appeared."—Morning Herald.

The Town.

By Leigh Hunt.
With Forty-five Engravings.
Price 2*s.* 6*d.* cloth.

"We will allow no higher enjoyment for a rational Englishman than to stroll leisurely through this marvellous town, arm in arm with Mr. Leigh Hunt. The charm of Mr. Hunt's book is, that he gives us the outpourings of a mind enriched with the most agreeable knowledge: there is not one page which does not glow with interest. It is a series of pictures from the life, representing scenes in which every inhabitant of the metropolis has an interest."—Times.

Jane Eyre.

By Currer Bell.
Price 2*s.* 6*d.* cloth.

"'Jane Eyre' is a remarkable production. Freshness and originality, truth and passion, singular felicity in the description of natural scenery and in the analyzation of human thought, enable this tale to stand boldly out from the mass, and to assume its own place in the bright field of romantic literature."—Times.

"'Jane Eyre' is a book of decided power. The thoughts are true, sound, and original; and the style is resolute, straightforward, and to the purpose. The object and moral of the work are excellent."—Examiner.

Shirley.

By Currer Bell.
Price 2*s.* 6*d.* cloth.

"'Shirley' is the anatomy of the female heart. It is a book which indicates exquisite feeling, and very great power of mind in the writer. The women are all divine."—Daily News.

"'Shirley' is very clever. It could not be otherwise. The faculty of graphic description, strong imagination, fervid and masculine diction, analytic skill, all are visible. . . . Gems of rare thought and glorious passion shine here and there."—Times.

Villette.

By Currer Bell.
Price 2*s.* 6*d.* cloth.

"'Villette' is a most remarkable work—a production altogether sui generis. Fulness and vigour of thought mark almost every sentence, and there is a sort of easy power pervading the whole narrative such as we have rarely met."—Edinburgh Review.

"The tale is one of the affections, and remarkable as a picture of manners. A burning heart glows throughout it, and one brilliantly distinct character keeps it alive."—Athenæum.

Political Economy of Art.

By John Ruskin, M.A.
Price 2*s.* 6*d.* cloth.

"A most able, eloquent, and well-timed work. We hail it with satisfaction, thinking it calculated to do much practical good, and we cordially recommend it to our readers."—Witness.

"Mr. Ruskin's chief purpose is to treat the artist's power, and the art itself, as items of the world's wealth, and to show how these may be best evolved, produced, accumulated, and distributed."—Athenæum.

Italian Campaigns of General Bonaparte.

By George Hooper.
With a Map. Price 2*s.* 6*d.* cloth.

"The story of Bonaparte's campaigns in Italy is told at once firmly, lightly, and pleasantly. The latest and best authorities, the Bonaparte correspondence in particular, appear to have been carefully and intelligently consulted. The result is a very readable and useful volume."—Athenæum.

Wuthering Heights and Agnes Grey.

By Ellis and Acton Bell.

With Memoir by CURRER BELL.

Price 2*s.* 6*d.* cloth.

"There are passages in this book of 'Wuthering Heights' of which any novelist, past or present, might be proud. It has been said of Shakespeare that he drew cases which the physician might study; Ellis Bell has done no less."—Palladium.

"There is, at all events, keeping in the book: the groups of figures and the scenery are in harmony with each other. There is a touch of Salvator Rosa in all."—Atlas.

A Lost Love.

By Ashford Owen.

Price 2*s.* cloth.

"'A Lost Love' is a story full of grace and genius. No outline of the story would give any idea of its beauty."—Athenæum.

"A tale at once moving and winning, natural and romantic, and certain to raise all the finer sympathies of the reader's nature."—Press.

Deerbrook.

By Harriet Martineau.

Price 2*s.* 6*d.* cloth.

"This popular fiction presents a true and animated picture of country life among the upper middle classes of English residents, and is remarkable for its interest, arising from the influence of various characters upon each other, and the effect of ordinary circumstances upon them. The descriptions of rural scenery, and the daily pursuits in village hours, are among the most charming of the author's writings; but the way in which exciting incidents gradually arise out of the most ordinary phases of life, and the skill with which natural and every-day characters are brought out in dramatic situations, attest the power of the author's genius."

Tales of the Colonies.

By Charles Rowcroft.

Price 2*s.* 6*d.* cloth.

"'Tales of the Colonies' is an able and interesting book. The author has the first great requisite in fiction—a knowledge of the life he undertakes to describe; and his matter is solid and real."—Spectator.

"It combines the fidelity of truth with the spirit of a romance, and has altogether much of De Foe in its character and composition."—Literary Gazette.

Romantic Tales

(Including "Avillion")

By the Author of "John Halifax, Gentleman."

A New Edition. Price 2*s.* 6*d.* cloth.

"'Avillion' is a beautiful and fanciful story, and the rest make very agreeable reading. There is not one of them unquickened by true feeling, exquisite taste, and a pure and vivid imagination."—Examiner.

"In a nice knowledge of the refinements of the female heart, and in a happy power of depicting emotion, the authoress is excelled by very few story tellers of the day."—Globe.

Domestic Stories.

By the Author of "John Halifax, Gentleman."

Price 2*s.* 6*d.* cloth.

"In a nice knowledge of the refinements of the female heart and in a happy power of depicting emotion, the authoress is excelled by very few story-tellers of the day."—Globe.

"There is not one of them unquickened by true feeling, exquisite taste, and a pure and vivid imagination."—Examiner.

After Dark.

By Wilkie Collins.

Price 2*s.* 6*d.* cloth.

"Mr. Wilkie Collins stands in the foremost rank of our younger writers of fiction. He tells a story well and forcibly, his style is eloquent and picturesque; he has considerable powers of pathos; understands the art of construction; is never wearisome or wordy, and has a keen insight into character."—Daily News.

"'After Dark' abounds with genuine touches of nature."—British Quarterly.

Paul Ferroll.

Fourth Edition. Price 2*s.* cloth.

"We have seldom read so wonderful a romance. We can find no fault in it as a work of art. It leaves us in admiration, almost in awe, of the powers of its author."—New Quarterly.

"The art displayed in presenting Paul Ferroll throughout the story is beyond all praise."—Examiner.

School for Fathers.

By Talbot Gwynne.

Price 2*s.* cloth.

"'The School for Fathers' is one of the cleverest, most brilliant, genial, and instructive stories that we have read since the publication of 'Jane Eyre.'"—Eclectic Review.

"The pleasantest tale we have read for many a day. It is a story of the Tatler and Spectator days, and is very fitly associated with that time of good English literature by its manly feeling, direct, unaffected manner of writing, and nicely-managed, well-turned narrative. The descriptions are excellent; some of the country painting is as fresh as a landscape by Alfred Constable, or an idyl by Tennyson."—Examiner.

NEW BOOKS FOR YOUNG READERS.

The Parents' Cabinet

Of Amusement and Instruction for Young Persons.

New Edition, carefully revised, in Twelve Shilling Volumes, each complete in itself, and containing a full page Illustration in Oil Colours, with Wood Engravings, in ornamented boards.

CONTENTS.

AMUSING STORIES, all tending to the development of good qualities, and the avoidance of faults.
BIOGRAPHICAL ACCOUNTS OF REMARKABLE CHARACTERS, interesting to Young People.
SIMPLE NARRATIVES OF HISTORICAL EVENTS, suited to the capacity of children.
ELUCIDATIONS OF NATURAL HISTORY, adapted to encourage habits of observation.
FAMILIAR EXPLANATIONS OF NOTABLE SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERIES AND MECHANICAL INVENTIONS.
LIVELY ACCOUNTS OF THE GEOGRAPHY, INHABITANTS, AND PRODUCTIONS OF DIFFERENT COUNTRIES.

MISS EDGEWORTH'S Opinion of the PARENTS' CABINET:—

"I almost feel afraid of praising it as much as I think it deserves. . . . There is so much variety in the book that it cannot tire. It alternately excites and relieves attention, and does not lead to the bad habit of frittering away the mind by requiring no exertion from the reader. . . . Whoever your scientific associate is, he understands his business and children's capabilities right well. . . . Without lecturing, or prosing, you keep the right and the wrong clearly marked, and hence all the sympathy of the young people is always enlisted on the right side."

 The work is now complete in 4 vols. extra cloth, gilt edges, at 3*s.* 6*d.* each; or in 6 vols. extra cloth, gilt edges, 2*s.* 6*d.* each.
